The meeting took place Tuesday under the assumption that everyone knew something had to be done. There didn't seem to be any disagreement over that issue. The only issue of concern is when the move will be take place. When the industries will be asked to move outside of the community will be influenced by financial concerns, and the permitting process. No one seemed to know for sure, who or what agency was responsible for determining how this will take place. It was assumed that the Minnesota Department of Agriculture will have to get involved since they are the licensing agency. Where the three anhydrous distributors re-locate will be an issue determined, in part, by the Minnesota Department of Agriculture, the county and township boards.

In addition to anhydrous, Police Chief Ken Froschheiser and Fire Chief Dave Bjorkman explained that there is more to the issue than anhydrous. The plants also store other chemicals. While the industries are under tight restrictions by licensing agencies, it is still a concern and a concern that will be addressed by a re-location.

Mayor Reeve defined "concrete plan of action by 1994" as being in position to begin the permit process, having purchased options, and completing other paperwork.

the Times in the 1930's and continued in that capacity until his death in 1968 from a stroke suffered while hospitalized for influenza.

Dale Wennberg served as master of ceremonies for the banquet with the welcome and invocation given by Mayor Bob Reeve. A large picture of Olson which is to hang in the Huck Olson Memorial Civic Center was unveiled by Elizabeth Hylden, widow of 1945 team member Jerry Hylden, who is credited with originating the idea of naming the civic center in honor of Olson.

Comments were given by Les Vigness of the 1945 team and by Marvin Lundin, editor of the Thief River Falls Times, who worked with Olson at the paper from 1961 until Olson's death in 1968. (See the editorials in today's issue for additional comment.)

At the hockey game the civic center was officially dedicated to Olson with Mayor Reeve speaking and the members of the 1945 team introduced. Captains and coach Glenn Chiodo of the 1992-93 hockey Prowlers presented members of the 1945 team with hockey sticks autographed by the current team members.

The Prowlers lost to Warroad 5-4 after the game was tied 2-2 at the end of the first two periods.

NJCAA football honors...

Two Pioneers on All-America team

Two Northland Community College football players were named to the 1992 National Junior College Athletic Association All-America football team, it was announced this week by Pioneers head coach Steve Klinke, who received the information from the NJCAA.

Brian Lambert was a First Team selection as a punter and Shaun Campbell was a Second Team pick as a running back. They are the first Northland football players ever to be awarded NJCAA All-America status.

Lambert, a 6-4, 222-pound product of Fort Myers, FL, led the nation in punting this fall with a 44.3-yard average on 31 kicks.

Campbell, a 5-8, 198-pounder from Arcadia, FL, ranked No. 10 in the NJCAA rushing charts with 1,063 yards, averaging 5.1 yards on 211 carries.

Other Minnesota Community College Conference Northern Division players earning post-season NJCAA recognition were Second Team selections Kenny Bond, a defensive tackle from the University of Minnesota-Crookston, Jamie Thomas, a defensive back from Brainerd, Joe Harmon, a wide receiver from Vermilion, and Tony DeLeon, a quarterback from Vermilion, who passed for 3,968 yards and 50 touchdowns this fall.

■ Saturday finals - (championship) Northland 64, Itasca 62; (third place) Mesabi 68, Hibbing 47.

First two wins of the 1992-93 basketball season for the Northland Community College women produced a Hibbing Invitational championship for the Pioneers over the weekend.

Northland started the year 0-3, but first-year head coach Rick Nikunen watched the Pioneers beat host Hibbing 61-51 in the opening Friday semifinals, then rally to edge Itasca 64-62 in the Saturday championship game.

The Pioneers and Vikings have a quick rematch tonight (Wednesday) at 6 p.m. in the Northland gym. A special promotion will offer spectators free admission to the game with a food stuff donation to the area food shelf.

Northland......61
Hibbing......51

A 20-point second half turnaround netted Northland a 61-51 semifinal win over Hibbing.

The Pioneers were up 27-25 at halftime, but trailed by as many as 10 in the second half before winding up with a 10-point win.

"It was a nice ball game for us," said Northland coach Rick Nikunen, who picked up his first win at the Pioneers' helm. "We came out flat at the start, and again at the beginning of the second half, but we came back, and I saw some improvement in just about every area of our game."

Holly Gram scored 20 points, Jodi Chaplinski netted 16 and Kim Peterson had 12 for the Pioneers, while Jill Brantl contributed with 14 rebounds. Julie Wikstrom and Lisa Cadwell both netted 15 for the Cardinals.

Northland was 25-for-62 from the field (40 percent) and 11-for-17 at the free throw line, where Hibbing went 5-for-9.

Northland......64

A slow start didn't take Northland out of the game as the Pioneers rallied to edge Itasca 64-62 for the title.

Northland trailed 22-8 just ten minutes into the game, but stayed within 30-24 at halftime and completed the comeback in the second half.

"We played tremendous defense," reported Northland coach Rick Nikunen. "I was real, real pleased with our performance. We were a little lethargic at the start, but we didn't let them get away from us. Offensively we did a nice job of execution, and we took care of the ball."

Three Pioneers and four Vikings hit double figures, led by Northland's Jodi Chaplinski with 19 points.

Northland was 26-for-56 from the field (46 percent) and 10-for-15 at the free throw line, while outrebounding Itasca 40-27 behind 10 boards apiece by Gram and Jill Brantl.

Itasca went 27-for-65 from the field (42 percent) and 6-for-10 at the line.

Blake stops TRF 3-2

Blake goalie Shep Harder turned back Thief River Falls with a strong 24-save effort Saturday to lift the Bears past Thief River Falls 3-2 in high school hockey match up played before a small matinee crowd at the Huck Olson Memorial Civic Center.

The loss dropped the Prowlers to 2-3. The three setbacks have been by a combined four goals, but Thief River Falls coach Glenn Chiodo is more disturbed by the manner in which his team has performed in those games. "We've had about the same script in all three losses," he explained. "We lose our discipline, we make a couple of mistakes and the puck ends up in our net."

A shorthanded breakaway goal by Jason Svir gave Thief River Falls a 1-0 lead at 8:25 of the first period, but Blake was allowed to set up behind the net and Jon Sturgis quickly converted a centering pass into a 1-1 tie at 12:49.

With Harder stopping Carter Rogalla on a another Thief River Falls shorthanded breakaway to start the second period, then stuffing a well-executed 2-on-1 rush, the game remained deadlocked until the Bears' Pat Brownlee caught the corner of the net with a slap shot from the top of the circle with just 51 seconds left.

Blake, coached by Lincoln High School graduate Jeff Lindquist, opened up a two-goal lead when Sturgis skated untouched through the Thief River Falls zone and beat Prowlers goalie Trevor Haugen with a 25-foot ice-hugger at 3:23 of the third period.

Thief River Falls answered in quick fashion on a goal by Jeff Twomey just 58 seconds later as he banged a centering pass past Harder to make it 3-2.

The Prowlers had a manpower edge at the end in an attempt to tie it when they pulled the goalie at 13:45 and Blake picked up a delay of game penalty at 14:20. But a pushing and shoving match around the Blake net just five seconds later saw both teams picking up two penalties.

With the net still open, that left the Prowlers with a 4-on-3 situation to close the game, but Chiodo was not at all happy with the situation.

"We made some critical mistakes in judgement the last minute, minute and a half," said Chiodo. "It was a very disappointing way to finish. You absolutely can not make those kinds of mistakes in those situations."

Harder came up with one more big save to preserve the Blake lead when he got a piece of a hard wrist shot by Svir with just seven seconds left.

"Their goalie played very, very well," acknowledged Chiodo.

Scoring

First period - TRF, Jason Svir (un), 8:25. Blake, Jon Sturgis (George Karos-Andy Karos), 12:49.

■ Tuesday, Dec. 15, finals - (third place) Argyle vs. Stephen, 6:15 p.m.; (championship) Marshall County Central vs. Tri-County, 8 p.m.

First round games in the Marshall County Central Invitational girls high school basketball tournament produced a four-point win for Tri-County and a five-point victory for host Marshall County Central Monday.

The Wildcats got by Stephen 45-41 and the Nordics edged Argyle 45-40 to set up Tuesday's finals.

Marshall Co. Central......45
Argyle......40

Fifty-three percent shooting from the field by Marshall County Central carried the Nordics past Argyle 45-40 to open the tournament.

The winners put up just 38 shots, but made 20 of them in going to 2-2 for the year.

"We shot real well," noted Marshall County Central coach Tom Mjelde, "but we've got to shoot the ball more."

The Nordics had quarter leads of 10-5, 22-10 and 31-25. They had a 12-point cushion midway through the fourth quarter before Argyle rallied.

"We took some shots at the end we maybe should not have taken," explained Mjelde. "But we're young. We made some mistakes. Hopefully they learn from those mistakes."

The Nordics are using three freshmen after losing a pair of starters – senior Sandi Gustafson and junior Jill Fosholm – for the year.

High-scoring Marshall County Central junior Sara Lokstad had a 21-point night. She was the game's only double-figure scorer. Freshman Tricia Pederson contributed with a 6-point, 8-rebound effort.

While Marshall County Central shots were dropping, Argyle was struggling with a 27 percent, 13-for-49 night from the field. The Eagles also had trouble at the free throw line with a 11-for-21 showing. The Nordics went 5-for-9 at the line. Marshall County Central had a 30-23 rebound edge, but also had more turnovers, 21-9.

Poor shooting costs TRF girls

Poor shooting cost the Thief River Falls girls Saturday in a 55-36 high school basketball loss to Dilworth-Glyndon-Felton.

The 1-2 Prowlers shot just 19 percent from the field for the game, connecting on only 12 of 63 attempts. They were down just 22-19 at halftime, but went 1-for-11 from the field in the third quarter to fall behind 41-21.

"It was embarrassing," said Thief River Falls coach Sally Wiltse. "You're not going to win an eighth grade game shooting 19 percent, let alone a varsity game."

Three Dilworth-Glyndon-Felton scorers reached double figures, led by Jaynie Rude with 19 points. Lone Thief River Falls double-figure scorer was Amy Adams with 12 points.

"We played a good first half – we played really good defense," pointed out Wiltse. "But they warmed up and did a better job shooting in the second half. We never did. We can't seem to put a whole game together."

The host Rebels shot 48 percent from the field for the game, a 21-for-44 effort that included a 9-for-17 third quarter when they broke it open.

Thief River Falls went 12-for-24 at the free throw line, where Dilworth-Glyndon-Felton finished 10-for-16. The Prowlers topped the turnover charts 19-18.

Players of the Week honors announced by the Thief River Falls coaching staff went to Jami Dehnert, varsity; Kara Baughtan, junior varsity; and Anne Padilla, freshmen.

Prowlers beat Johnson 6-2

Ahead just 1-0 at the end of the first period, Thief River Falls scored four times in a five-minute span to start the second period Friday, sparking the Prowlers to a 6-2 high school hockey win over St. Paul Johnson at the Huck Olson Memorial Civic Center.

Rick Osthy and Jeff Twomey both scored twice for the Prowlers, while Jason Svir and Nathan Knutson had one goal each. Knutson and Svir also picked up three assists while Marc Haugen had two.

Osthy slammed home a power play goal at 10:20 to give the Prowlers their 1-0 first period lead.

The second period started with a bang when Twomey steered in a Ryan Kraemer centering pass at 1:02. Svir scored off the pads of Johnson goalie Nick Jalonack at 3:03 and Osthy poked in a rebound at 3:42, giving the Prowlers three goals in 2 minutes, 40 seconds.

It became 5-0 at 6:14 when Jalonack failed to clear the puck on a diving poke check attempt, leaving a wide open net for Twomey.

"We took the steam out of them with those goals at the start of the second period," said Thief River Falls coach Glenn Chiodo. "They're a good team, they'll be in contention down there. But their bus ride got a lot longer after we got those goals."

Petr Blahoski replaced Jalonack after the fifth Thief River Falls goal. He played well the rest of the way, although the Prowlers made it 6-0 when Knutson scored on a slap shot from the point 44 seconds into the third period.

Thief River Falls goalie Eric Dowers was working on his second straight shutout before play got a little loose in the Prowlers' end in the final minutes, leading to Johnson goals by Shawn Pogreba at 13:20 and Skip Hazzard at 13:40.

"For 40-42 minutes we played well," noted Chiodo. "We had a pretty disciplined effort. We shot the puck, made the saves and made the outlet passes. But we became undisciplined at the end - we weren't playing the kind of hockey we wanted to play. You can't have those letdowns. If you're going to be a good hockey team, you have to put people away if you get them on their heels like that."

Scoring

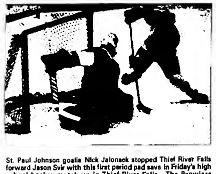
First period - TRF, Rick Osthy (Marc Haugen-Jason Svir), 10:20.

Second period - TRF, Jeff Twomey (Ryan Kraemer), 1:02. TRF, Jason Svir (Nathan Knutson-Carter Rogalla), 3:03. TRF, Osthy (Svir-Haugen), 3:42. TRF, Twomey (Corey Olson-Knutson), 6:14.

Third period - TRF, Knutson (Svir-Osthy), :44. SPJ, Shawn Pogreba (Derek Ohlsta-Jason Falk), 13:20. SPJ, Skip Hazzard (Rich Lewis), 13:40.

Goalie Saves

TRF - Eric Dowers 10-6-4 - 20. SPJ - Nick Jalonack 10-0-x, Petr Blahoski x-8-8, SPJ game total - 26.



St. Paul Johnson goalie Nick Jalonack stopped Thief River Falls forward Jason Svir with this first period pad save in Friday's high school hockey match-up in Thief River Falls. The Prowlers knocked off the Governors 6-2.

Huskies fall to Rams

Goodridge couldn't match up with Roseau size-wise Saturday and wound up losing a 55-41 boys high school basketball game on the Rams' court.

It was the second start and the second loss of the 1992-93 season for the Huskies.

"I can't fault the effort," said Goodridge coach John Rahn. "We did the best job we could, but we're young, and they're a lot bigger than we are."

The Rams led at the quarter stops 19-14, 32-24 and 38-28.

"Both teams played good defense," noted Rahn.

A 1-2 Roseau scoring punch featured Jeff Taylor with 23 points and David Pankratz with 15. Eldon Quam led Goodridge with 10 points.

With both sides hitting 20 shots from the field (Goodridge 20/51 for 39 percent; Roseau 20/50 for 40 percent), free throw spelled the difference. The Huskies were 0-for-2 from the line, while the Rams went 12-for-16.

Roseau finished with a 33-25 rebound edge.

Scoring

MCC boys romp 85-41 over Bears

Tim Olson scored 26 points and Ivan Hirst had 15 Friday as Marshall County Central bounced back from a pair of close season-opening losses with a one-sided 85-41 win over Lake of the Woods in boys high school basketball at Newfolden.

"We played hard, and we executed well throughout the game. I was very pleased with that," noted Marshall County Central coach Ron Ueland.

The Nordics led at the quarter stops 16-7, 39-16 and 59-21.

Outdoor News

Christmas Tree Recycling

Christmas season is here. Shortly after the holidays, used Christmas trees will appear on curbs and around trash cans. Due to recent legislation, old Christmas trees cannot be deposited in landfills or at disposal recovery facilities to be burned.

The trees can be recycled, however. Recycling by chipping is much cheaper than any other disposal method, according to Phil Vieth, a forester with the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources.

What is needed to recycle Christmas trees? A program promoted and run by a community organization with the support of local government, according to Vieth.

"It is really very easy and simple to organize a recycling program," Vieth said. "The key is to organize an effort early. Do a good job of promotion so the public knows where to take their trees, and let people know that the recycled material of wood, bark and needles can be used for mulch.

Several cities, counties, private tree nurseries, and even some garbage haulers have active Christmas tree recycling programs.

DNR Forestry Division has a VCR tape available explaining how to establish a recycling program. Anyone can borrow the tape free of charge by contacting Phil Vieth, Metro Region Forestry headquarters, 1200 Warner Road, St. Paul MN 55106; call (612) 772-7930.

Included with the video tape is an outline specifying things that need to be done, including information on how to accomplish the tasks to have a successful promotional effort and program.

DNR Gift Certificates

Need a gift for an outdoors enthusiast who seems to have everything?

A gift certificate from the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources could be the answer.

DNR gift certificate allows last-minute shoppers to give hunting and fishing licenses, cross country ski passes, state park vehicle permits, collectible wildlife stamps, and registrations for boats, snowmobiles and all-terrain vehicles to those hard-to-buy-for outdoors people on their holiday shopping lists.

The DNR gift certificate, now four years old, has proven popular, particularly during the holiday season, according to Dawn Thell, DNR License Bureau front counter supervisor. "I think it's the personalized nature of our gift certificates that have made them such a hit," Thell said. "And the packaging really makes the gift certificate itself an attractive gift."

Enclosures for the gift certificates are available depicting an artist's rendition of Minnesota's state flower, the showy lady slipper, in either of two different color motifs, or a photographic waterfall reproduction produced with a hand-colored sepia tone effect.

Unlike typical gift certificates for dollar amounts of merchandise, DNR gift certificates are for specific licenses and seasons.

"Every outdoors person needs a particular license or registration in order to pursue their favorite activity," Thell said. "This is one way to make sure they have everything they need when the time comes to get out there and do it."

DNR gift certificates may be obtained and redeemed in person or by mail only at the DNR License Bureau, 500 Lafayette Road, St. Paul, MN 55155-4026. For mail application, contact the DNR License Bureau toll free in Minnesota at 1-800-766-6000.

Snowmobile laws strictly enforced in TRF

Snowmobile operators had better brush up on the law, the city will be strictly enforcing its snowmobile ordinance.

Police Chief Ken Froschheiser said that during the weekend of December 11-13, nine citations were written for driving on sidewalks, two for driving on boulevards (private property), and two for driving in a no snowmobile zone. Chief Froschheiser said the police will continue to write citations for violations of the snowmobile ordinance.

Chief Froschheiser added that it's no excuse to be driving in violation of the law just because they are following the tracks laid by other snowmobile operators.

Christmas Supplement

Decorating the city streets at Christmas

As we walk between [illegible] and [illegible] Thief River Falls [illegible] time of year [illegible] the bright [illegible] decorations on the [illegible] light poles and hanging [illegible] the intersections. We have come to expect them to go up from Thanksgiving to Christmas each year and probably never give any thought to how they got there. According to Dale Narlock of the Thief River Falls city electrical department, it isn't quite as simple as it appears.

Putting up all the decorations takes about five days after several days of repair and checking everything out. It takes one whole day to check and repair the Christmas trees that grace the intersections downtown. The trees which are about seven years old are gone over by two or three city employees while this year a dozen members of the Silverton 4-H club checked all the lanterns which are attached to the light poles for burned out lights and cracked sockets. According to Narlock, the young people did a very nice job and "had a good time doing it." They also saved the city employees about two days of work. He adds that the cost of new bulbs and sockets each year runs about $250.

Narlock says that some of the repairs and even replacements of lanterns, which are no longer made by the company they were purchased from several years ago, is done by employees on their own time.

The schedule for putting up the decorations is one day each for setting up poles and putting up guide wires, putting the trees up in the intersections, and putting up the "Season's Greetings" sign and plugging in all the lights. Wrapping garland around all the light poles and putting up wreathes takes an additional two days.

Decorating the park for the annual Christmas tree lighting ceremony takes two or three people about one more day. The lights are taken down each year and restrung the following winter. Narlock says they try to use the same tree every year, but had to change to a new one this year because the last one died. He says that people sometimes damage the branches by trying to climb the tree.

The Christmas trees are about 16 feet high and weigh about 150 pounds each. They are five feet wide across the base and are held up by 5/16-inch wires to the corners of the closest buildings. To replace the trees, which have a life of about 20 years, would cost about $1,200 to $1,500. The last time new decorations were purchased a committee was set up by the chamber and commerce and the city council to decide on what sort of decorations to get.

The "Season's Greetings" sign is actually in three pieces: the sign itself and two pieces of garland, one at each end. It hangs three and a half feet down and is about 16 feet long. According to Narlock, it would cost about $500 to replace it.

Narlock also says that he would like to see an annual fundraiser to get money for a repair and replacement fund for the decorations.

Storage of the decorations has been an ongoing problem. They are presently being kept at the old Soo Line depot building, but a more "permanent" location is needed. Narlock says that a 24 by 32 foot storage building is needed on the main floor with an accessible loading area.

Oh, yes, what about the one question everyone always asks about the city's decorations — why do they have to be put up so early? According to Dale Narlock, there are several reasons. The crews are always concerned about the weather, especially in November and December. There is also a concern about avoiding the traffic rush involved in Christmas shopping later in the season. He says that, for a person up on the lift to attach the Christmas trees, a car sliding through the intersection on icy streets could be very dangerous. He adds that the law enforcement personnel do the best they can to direct traffic while the work is going on, but there is always a major concern about safety.

One more thing. A very Merry Christmas and Happy Holiday Greeting to everyone from the members of the city electrical department.

Christmas Peace?

Sending a card

Do animals talk
At midnight on the Cold Eve of Christmas?
I sat on a bale
Of pure golden straw
Waiting to hear the

Karmen Lee Ortloff

by Karmen Lee Ortloff

Christmas in the Dondoneau family means French meat pies, Norwegian lefse, and Swedish meatballs. If my family seems to mix a lot of traditions, well, we do! However, there is one tradition that was purely Dondoneau, and that was Christmas programs.

Christmas time was the only time of the year when the entire family could come together, and, as a result, was the only time all the cousins got together. All any of us could think of was getting at those presents under the tree.

We would sit through dinner at the little card table off to the side of the adult table, and gobble up all the goodies as fast as we could. The entire time we starred at that tree, watching to make sure no one would make any sudden moves towards our presents. If anyone got too close, we'd be forced to nail them with a pea or other such vegetable.

With dinner finished, we would all sit around the tree waiting for someone to read the labels on the presents and pass them to the right people (we couldn't read well back then).

"We can't open presents until all the dishes are washed and the living room is cleaned. So why don't you all go play for a little while," Grandma would always say. None of us liked her much at that moment (we got over it right after we opened her present and soon we were flooding her with kisses, but for that one brief moment, we were not happy campers!).

"C'mon," my Trudeau cousins (Chris and Mary) would say as they would lead us away to the spare bedroom.

"Hey, let's put on a program," Chris would always say. All of us younger cousins thought that was the best idea in the world so we would start rehearsals.

After thirty minutes of grueling practices presided over by Chris and Mary (they were tough women to please back then), we would emerge for our performance.

One year we made costumes out of Grandma's towels and yarn. I don't think she was too happy, but she never said a word about it.

Chris and Mary, because they were the oldest, always got to be Mary and Joseph. Life can be so unfair. I was always in the choir next to Grandma's kitchen counter.

"Away in the manger no crib for a bed..." we would all start to bellow, "I...the little lord Jesus asleep on his head..." sometimes we didn't know the words, but it never stopped us, no sir.

"Randolph the bull-legged cowboy, had a very shiny gun... then one foggy Christmas eve, Santa came to say, Randolph with your gun so bright, won't you shoot my wife tonight...." My neighbors taught me that song, they we not a very good influence. Nonetheless, we sang it. We didn't understand what we were singing, but we sang it.

All my aunts and uncles would sit in a semi-circle watching this performance with my Grandma smack dab in the middle. They all thought that we couldn't see them snickering as we belted out the holiday tunes, but we could. We didn't mind, though. After every song we got a round of thunderous applause and Chris and Mary would tell us that we could sit down because we were finished. Those two cousins of mine sure wielded a lot of power. "Very good. Now put away all these towels," Chris would tell us. "And when you get back, you can open gifts!"

As quickly as we could, we'd shove all the towels back into the rack above the commode in the bathroom and rush back to the living room where Mary and Chris were already sitting. Looking back, those two always grabbed the towels but never, never had to put them away.

It's a shame I don't have cousins to order around like that. Now that we are all grown-up (relatively speaking), something is missing from our Dondoneau Christmases. Perhaps it's time to whip out the old music books, yes, I think so.

My Christmas

by Sara Tyler

One special thing about Christmas when I was little was Santa Claus coming. My whole family would be gathered in the living room when the doorbell would ring. When my dad would answer the door, there was Santa! He'd come in and bring the smell of cold peanuts with him. He'd give each of us kids a brown paper bag full of peanuts—with the shells, hard candies, and an apple. Then he'd reach into the big black garbage bag he carried and give us each a present. I always hung back and let my sisters do the talking. For some reason I felt safer next to my parents. Though I was slightly seared of him, I loved the presents Santa brought.

One year my family was celebrating in our downstairs family room. We had a little tree set up in the corner with presents piled under it. We were taking turns opening presents, and it was my turn. I opened up a big box and lifted out a big brown and white stuffed Saint Bernard. I grabbed him around the neck and squeezed. It was love at first sight! Bruno, as I later named him, became my companion for years.

Memorable Christmas Foods

by Maren Dyrud

When I was very young, we always went to my grandmother's house in Red Wing, Minn., for Christmas. On Christmas Eve night we always had a wonderful meal of ribs, potatoes and gravy, and sometimes lutefisk. My grandma always took a block of butter and molded it with her hands into a miniature Christmas tree. She used a knife to make little ridges in it, sprinkled green sugar over it for the foliage, and then added round silver balls for the ornaments. It was delicious on lefse, because the sugar was already in it.

For dessert we always had "sote suppe" in little glass bowls. I didn't like it at all, with its prunes, raisins, and huge tapioca sitting in a reddish-clear sauce. I always finished it, though, because then I knew if I was going to be the first to open one of the Christmas gifts: my grandma always put a gumdrop at the bottom of one of the bowls of "sote suppe," and the person who was lucky enough to discover it in their bowl could be the first one to open a gift (after all the dishes had been washed, of course.)

Through the years I have learned to get over my love/hate relationship with the "sote suppe." We also ate "Tilslorede Bondepige" (it was a few years before I could pronounce this dessert.) It consisted of alternating layers of applesauce, graham cracker crumbs, and whipped cream. It's Norwegian, and its name means "the farmer's daughter's bridal wreath dessert." All of these foods make up fond memories of my grandmother's Christmas meals.

A Christmas Memory

by Ingrid Morken

One of my fondest Christmas memories was at my uncle and aunt's lake home on Lake Lida. When my family arrived, my sister and brother and I were herded down to the basement to help string popcorn and cranberries for the enormous Christmas tree. The Christmas tree was almost two stories tall and [illegible] the house with a rich pine scent. My father dumped out presents from big black garbage bags under the tree where mountains of gifts in red, green, and gold paper and ribbons were piled.

Every year my mother made Christmas dresses for my sister and me, and that year I was particularly proud of my dress. It was made of purple velvet and had a white silk collar. With my hair braided back and my brand new glasses on, I thought I looked almost grown up. I was in fourth grade and the oldest of all the children there. Like many girls at that time, I brought my Cabbage Patch Kid wherever I went. When I skated on the lake, I dressed it up in warm clothes and set it carefully in the snow to watch. An area of snow was shoveled off the lake, and my relatives and I skated and sledded and slid on it.

At night the floors were covered with sleeping bags, and everyone was cozy and warm. It would be hard for Santa Claus to fill our stockings without anyone noticing.

Nellie Skadsem

by Sara Tyler

Nellie Skadsem was born on March 29, 1909, in Iowa. They moved throughout her younger years to Grafton, Drayton, and other towns in that area. Her father worked for John Little who had farmers working for him around there.

Normal Christmases for her family consisted of the large Christmas meal and Christmas cookies. They always went to church for Christmas, and there were church programs. She was never able to perform in the Christmas programs because they lived too far out, but her family enjoyed watching them. When they traveled to church, they had to ride behind the horses for seven miles. So, her mother would heat irons for them to put near their feet. When they got to church, the minister's wife would put the irons on her stove so they would be hot again for the way home.

Their Christmas tree was strung with cranberries and decorated with paper decorations. Some decorations were kept, but others had to be made fresh again every year. They always opened their presents on Christmas morning. The presents were always a surprise; they never knew what they would get.

One year her brothers got new sleds. There was a grainery behind their place, and the snow slanted from the point of the grainery out until it was level ground again. Nellie didn't have a sled, so she had her dad make one for her. Her sled was made from boards, so it didn't slide as well as the boys's. Her brothers would make a path perfect for sliding, and then she would go down on her sled made of boards and ruin it. Nellie enjoyed playing outside. She and her brothers had snowball fights often, but she usually got the worst of it because they were bigger than she was.

A Christmas tradition for them was hanging their stockings on Christmas Eve. This tradition led to a practical joke one year. Her father was always pulling pranks, and this year he had put common things in the stockings. Nellie received the stove poker in hers, and her younger sister got one piece of candy wrapped in newspaper. The four children couldn't see any presents anywhere, so they were naturally upset. Finally their dad told them to open the kitchen door. When they did they saw all the presents sitting in there. He laughed while they ran to them.

She says that some things in her life she would do again, but there are things in life that she would like to change. That's something for all of us to remember.

Alvida Salte

by Maren Dyrud

Alvida Salte, eighty-seven, was born on a farm near Fertile. She learned Norwegian as a child and also speaks fluent Spanish. Her family always had a Christmas tree, and it was her older sister's job to decorate it. She would keep the door of the living room shut until Christmas Eve. The other siblings would wait with excitement and anticipation to see how the tree would look.

She spent some very special Christmases in South America. Alvida and her husband were missionaries in the country of Columbia for several years. Many of the Columbians knew very little about the Christmas holiday. They enjoyed it immensely, and more people came to their Christmas services than to their regular services. They could use their program to show more people the way of salvation. Because of this, the Christmases she spent in Columbia were very meaningful to her and many others.

Alvida's husband passed away while on the mission field, and she returned to the United States with the intent of returning. She was not able to return, though. During her Christmases in a foreign country she didn't feel homesick—she had the joy of knowing that her Christmas celebrations were bringing people to know the Lord.

The Great Christmas Search

by Kurt Reynolds

Christmas is almost here. The signs are everywhere. The once long chain of red, white, green, and black paper rings that hangs from the fireplace once was thirty long, but has since dwindled to four. That is but one indication that Christmas Eve is only four days away.

There are many other signs. The feverish shopping trips that my mother and grandmother make. The stack of Christmas greeting cards, clothed in either red or white envelopes, that is growing. The stockpiling of Christmas food: fudge, fruit cake, and armies of elves, reindeer, and snow men cookies.

The sign that I've been carefully monitoring the most is the growing metropolis of presents being erected under our tree. So far only two presents are addressed to me. They are tiny ones from my brother and sister. So that means that the biggies are still out there, somewhere. There is still time for me to find them before they are lost to me forever, or at least until Christmas Eve, which to a six year old boy like me seems like an eternity.

For the hundredth time I search our attic for my presents. For the hundredth time I come up empty handed. Next I investigate every square inch of the high and dark places in the basement. There aren't signs of cobwebs or dust since I frequent these places so often. After that I scour my sister's room. I discover a diary, love letters, and a big red ring that reads, "Arnie, Class of '80". These things are of usual interest and value, but are worthless to me now. Finally I check the loft above our garage. The shelves and closet are bare. Last year's wood burner kit and robotix set had been found here. Ahh, the good old days.

I begin to fear that this is it. The first year since I can remember that I haven't found at least one present to ease my agonizing curiosity before Christmas. I began to wonder how my mom could be so cruel to me. My brother simply told me what he got me and sent me on my way. That did a lot of good, the present was already wrapped and under the tree. My sister said I would be lucky to see this Christmas when I told her that I had searched her room. Luckily before she got her claws into me my dad knocked on the door and told us to be quit since he was trying to take a nap. Dad was of little use to me he frustratingly denied that he knew anything as to the whereabouts of my presents. He also tried to explain that the presents weren't his department. It seems that his jobs included putting all the Christmas lights on the house, trimming the tree, and staying out of moms way as much as possible. Did he think I was stupid? I know that they are all in on it.

This called for drastic action. I had to think of something to do. I needed a plan. But what could I do? I know. Since they insisted on hiding my presents I will hide theirs until we reach an agreement or until Christmas. Drastic times call for drastic measures.

I returned to our living where our tree stood. The plan still needed some fine tuning, but... A scream nearly escaped my mouth, but after several seconds I was able to talk it down into a sorry whimper. It was horrible. I couldn't look! There weren't any presents under the tree!

I cried out for everyone in the house to hear. They came running. Quick! We've been robbed! Somebody call the police! My mom was the first to break the bad new to me. It seems that there had been no burglar. But it was almost as bad. She had brought the presents over to my grandmother's house. It seems that we'll be spending Christmas Eve over there.

From the Desk of Santa Claus

Dec 10, 1992

Dear Friend Marv:

How are you and all my friends at the Times? It was a pleasure to be in your city last Saturday. I really enjoyed seeing all the children at the Auditorium.

I am sitting at my desk checking over all my list and reading a few letters from children around the world. I just finished one from Paris, France, and I picked up one from Tommy in Thief River Falls. That's what made me think of you. I thought I'll drop you a line to let you what is happening around North Pole City these days.

Mama has been very busy too. She prepares and bakes all the goodies for the Christmas Day party. That's held every year after the toys are delivered, its a time to rest and relax.

The Stables are exceptionally busy at this time of the year. Norby my head cobbler is checking over the harnesses and shining them up, making sure all the bells work. He had to make Dasher and Dancers' harnesses a little bigger this year. You know they were my first reindeer. Prancer and Vixen pulls my sleigh around North Pole City Most of the time in the off season when I go for a ride. You know, I see a lot of sleighs in peoples yards that have anywhere from two to all Nine reindeer. Well, to tell the truth, I only use all nine on Christmas eve, When My sleigh is laden with toys. Comet and Cupid are very busy setting up the reindeer games. Comet has setup the reindeer games for tomorrow at 9:00 a.m. I just know that Fireball will be part of my sleigh someday he is showing a lot of promise lately. We don't have it on week-ends because I am usually busy visiting stores and communities around the area. Donner and Blitzen was the last two to be added to my sleigh team, but they have young families that really keep them busy. You know Rudolph is Donner's oldest son. He was really proud of Rudolph the year of the Big Storm, when he lead my sleigh with his bright Red Nose. Rudolph leads my sleigh all the time now. Willy, the head stable keeper, has been bringing down the magical hay from the loft. He needs to start the reindeer on their special diets and training so they will be able to pull my sleigh all night long. You know what night that is right.

All the Elves are working in the toy factory making Toy soldiers and rocking horses, bikes, trucks, cars, bus, and trains just to mention a few. Ed, my Chief Elf, is keeping an eye on the weather report this time of the year and it looks like it will be a beautiful Christmas eve again.

Oh! here comes Mama with some fresh hot cookies she just took from the oven and some Hot cocoa with the little marshmallows I like so well. She is always humming "Here comes Santa Claus" I think she does that just to remind me the time of the season, you know only 14 days until Christmas Eve. Mama made me a new suit this year she said the old was getting a little worn on the knees after so many years, but she kept it the same color.

Well Marv I better close now and get back to the childrens' letters. I hope and pray that everyone remembers what Christmas is really about. That it is Christ's Birthday and send Good will to all Mankind. That the gifts come from the heart and not just the pocket book and everyone receiving a gift excepts it as a gift from the heart and not for "what it is".

Ho Ho Ho Merrrry Christmas and A Happy New Year

God Bless,

Thore Skomedal

by Maren Dyrud

Born in Setesdal, Norway, in 1889, Thore Skomedal arrived in America in 1906. Though a hundred and three years old, he can still remember celebrating Christmas in Norway. When he was a boy, they used to practice a tradition called "Shooting in Christmas." On Christmas Eve people would walk to their neighbor's house and shoot their rifles into the dark night sky. Hearing the shots, the neighbor would invite them in for some "Christmas Cheer." After the drinks were finished, the neighbor would often join the group, and they would move on to the next house. Thus the night would pass with the mountains echoing with shots and the celebrants tottering with Cheer. At sun up everyone would head back home to get ready for church service on Christmas Day.

Helen Bendickson

by Sara Tyler

Helen Bendickson was born in Stevens Point, Wisconsin, on May 19, 1898. Her family left the beautiful, hilly landscape of Wisconsin in 1905 when they moved to Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

Helen's family enjoyed Christmas for it was something to look forward to year after year. When the Christmas season would arrive, her family would gather to decorate the tree. They would string popcorn and cranberries to use as garland. They would also hang bulbs on the tree. Other special decorations were the candles they would place on the branches. Even though it was dangerous, they never had an accidental fire. The house would also be decorated with evergreen boughs over doorways.

There was more visiting among neighbors back then, and she remembered taking trips to neighborhood farms. The horses would be attached to the sleigh and harnessed with bells. Every move the horses would make would start a reaction from the strap of bells around them. When the horses were ready, the family would go outside and pile into the sleigh. They would bundle up in blankets to keep warm. They also had foot warmers, metal boxes with a drawer that kept a heated brick. These were kept at the bottom of the sleigh under the blankets.

Another special occasion around Christmas was the school Christmas program. Everyone in the community would come to watch the children. Not only would they sing Christmas carols, of which "Silent Night" is Helen a favorite, they would also act out the Nativity scene. There were also little dialogues in the program.

Helen and her brother would always hang their stockings for Santa. Then they would fall asleep Christmas Eve anticipating the presents they would receive Christmas Day. When they woke up in the morning and checked their stockings, they would find little toys, candy, and an orange. After the emptying of the stockings, they would gather around the Christmas tree, with the candles lit for it was still dark, and open presents.

After they got home from church, the family, relatives, and neighbors would get together to celebrate. The children would play games while the adults sat and talked. Then there was the large Christmas meal with turkey and a roast. The meal would either end with apple or pumpkin pie, or a pudding. The pudding was steamed fruits and nuts with suet light, white sweet sauce covering it. After the delicious meal, everyone would leave the table content.

Helen believes that things have changed. The change is more than people having cars and televisions—Christmas has changed. Every year it gets more and more commercialized. Christmas was simpler when she was a child. It wasn't electronic toys that were important; it was family and friends that were most cherished.

Milton Swanson

by Karmen Lee Ortloff

All twelve of Herbert Swanson's children filled up on the turkey, apple pie, and rice pudding made from three pounds of rice, four quarts of milk, and lots of raisins. Herbert's youngest son, Milton, was in charge of cooking the family meals after his mother passed away.

Milton Swanson was born roughly seventy years ago on a farm five miles outside of Strandquist.

Everyone, after eating until they were ready to burst, would then bundle up in as many layers as possible and grab their blankets off their beds to go out caroling.

Because the Swanson's lived the farthest out of town, they would always be the first to leave their house. Each member of the family would get to go out and pick their favorite horse from among the family's sixteen horses in the pasture next to the barn. These horses would make up teams of six that would pull two of the family's sleighs.

Starting at eight o'clock at night, the Swanson's horses would trot the fifty mile loop around the Strandquist area.

Singing songs together at the top of their lungs (whether they were Christmas songs or not did not matter), the two sleighs would travel over hay routes to their cousins home.

Not bothering to slow down, much less stop, the cousins were left scrambling to get their coats on and hitch up a team as quickly as possible to join the festivities. Before long, the two or three sleighs from their cousin's farm had caught up to the Swansons and everyone watched with amusement as other families rushed to join the convoy.

Before long, fifteen sleighs with over seventy people would have joined in the singing.

As the night wore on, people snuggled together to stay warm. The cold wasn't too bad, though, because everyone went out only if it was nice weather—about ten degrees below zero!

With the women and children in the front sleighs drinking soda and nibbling on Christmas goodies and the men in the back few sleighs drinking a homemade beer brew, the convoy continued to pass one farm house after another.

Slowly, one by one, sleighs would start to fall away and eventually only the Swansons were left as they headed for home.

Back at four o'clock in the morning, Milton's older brothers rarely even went to bed. Instead, they just jumped off the sleighs and headed to the barn to milk the family cows.

Milton, because he was the youngest, got to go into the house to get some sleep before he got up the next morning to prepare food.

Forrest Olson

by Maren Dyrud

Forrest Olson grew up twelve miles northeast of Stephen with two brothers and one sister. Christmas brought foods such as knuckebrod, a type of hard flatbread; porridge-like rommegrot and risegrot, a rice pudding, to his household. The gifts he enjoyed receiving were a pair of skis or a sled, which provided much entertainment in the wintertime.

Later on in life, he became a teacher in a one room school house. The school had about twenty to twenty five kids spanning eight grades. The highlight of the year was definitely the Christmas programs that he and his students put on. They would begin to prepare for it after Thanksgiving. As a result, the excited students didn't get too much schoolwork done during that period of time. However, the program was considered as language arts. Forrest used Christmas program booklets as a source of ideas for his productions. The students busily memorized Christmas carols, little skits, and dialogues for their big day.

His students also helped make their one room building look very festive with crepe paper streamers that they hung across the ceiling. The school house also had its own Christmas tree beautified with lit candles. Although this was a bit dangerous and required some supervision, it was lovelier than any of our modern electric lights could have made it.

At the end of the program, the students would exchage gifts. There was a price limit of fifty cents on the gifts, but Forrest was quick to point out that fifty cents could buy much more than it does now. He also said that they were happier with those gifts than if they had spent a hundred dollars on them.

Forrest Olson is now 82, and he fondly remembers the school Christmas programs he organized, and how special they made Christmas for him.

Anna King
by Ingrid Morken

On January 21 1901 Anna King was born on a farm in Bricelyn, a small town in southern Minnesota. She already had one sister and five brothers. Her birth was not long after the holiday season, a joyful time for her family.

As Anna grew up she learned to milk the cows, feed the chickens, and provide 'slop' for the pigs. Taking a break from those chores was a welcome relief, and maybe that's why she loved Christmas so much.

Each Christmas her family, relatives, and a few neighbors would gather at her small farmhouse to celebrate. On Christmas Eve they would go to the church service and sing carols together. Anna's brothers would find a good Christmas tree in the woods and chop it down and put it up in the house. Her mother would prepare a traditional Norwegian dinner of lutefisk, potatoes, and lefse. The children anticipated their Christmas gifts and their hang stockings for Santa Claus, although the gifts were always quite modest. One of Anna's favorite presents was a glass doll, the only doll she every had as a child. It was a sad day when one of her brothers accidentally shut a trunk door on top of it, shattering it to pieces.

An additional resident of Anna's house was her blind grandmother. Anna and her sister and brothers would take turns leading their grandmother around and providing tobacco for her pipe. Her grandmother enjoyed when Anna would read her stories, especially around Christmas time.

After nineteen years in Bricelyn, Anna and her family moved to Thief River Falls where she has lived ever since. She still enjoys following the Christmas traditions she did as a child.

Christine Barstad
by Sara Tyler

Christine Barstad was born in March, 1907, six miles out of Thief River Falls. She grew up there and has lived around town ever since. She has lived in the house she raised her family in for over forty years. The Christmases her family had were always happy. The ones she enjoyed the most were ones when the whole family was still together.

The school Christmas programs were an important part of the holiday. The children sang songs, performed plays, and recited poems. Someone always dressed up as Santa Claus. The Christmas programs were a time for neighbors to get together and exchange gifts. The children always gave the teacher a gift, and the teacher usually had a small token for the children too. The programs were really a time for people to get together. They always had so much fun that they wouldn't get home until ten-thirty at night. People would celebrate the whole time between Christmas and New Years. They would take turns going to different neighbors. People enjoyed the visiting, and it was a way to keep spirits up in the dead of winter.

Christine's family was Norwegian and their Christmas meals and celebrations reflected that heritage. Their Christmas meal would be lutefisk, potatoes, melted butter over the fish and potatoes, vegetables, apples, and lefse. When the children were little, because their mother didn't want them to choke on any fish bones, she would butter a piece of lefse and put fish on it, making sure there were no bones, and roll it up. She would then feed it to the younger kids.

A big part of Christine's family's Christmas was the tradition of joining hands and walking around the Christmas tree singing hymns. The first carols she remembers singing were in Norwegian, because that was the language her parents knew best. Naturally, her parents would sing in their language, and the children would join them. There weren't electric lights, so this tradition was carried on by tallow candles around the room and on the tree. The tree was put into a big jug of water to keep it moist. The house had a few decorations, but because of the candles they had to be careful. The tree was trimmed with homemade paper chains, stars, angels, and Christian pictures. Plus they had the candles on the branches. The candles were dangerous so you had to be mighty careful. The candles had holders with weights on the bottom to keep them from falling, and in later years the family got holders that could be clamped right onto the tree..

Christmas Eve was the time for family presents. The presents that were left to be found on Christmas Day were the ones from Santa Claus. The younger children would hang stockings, but when they were about twelve years old, they stopped hanging their stockings. In the stockings they would find candies and nuts. Hair ribbons were common gifts for the girls to get for Christmas; and, of course, they also got dolls. The dolls they had would disappear in October or November, and they wouldn't know what happened to them. Their mom would have taken them to fix. If a doll needed new hair, she'd find some hair to give her. Then she'd make the dolls new clothes so that the girls would have fresh dolls as Christmas presents. They made a lot of the presents that they would give. The children liked to play with toy cattle and they would make little cows and fences out of cardboard. Once the children got older and stopped believing in Santa they helped make the toys for their younger sisters and brothers.

On Christmas Day the family would go to church services. At the church there was someone posted by the big tree with a wet cloth on a pole. It was that person's job to watch and make sure no accidental fires started. Christmas Eve devotion was pretty much left to individual families, because the pastor lived so far away from the church himself that he couldn't make it to a church service on Christmas Eve. Her family would sing hymns and have a private devotion to make up for no service on Christmas Eve.

Then there was Christmas fooling, or Julebukking as the Norwegians called it. The teenagers would put on masks and go around to neighboring farms, knock, and walk right in. They would gather people until a large group ended at a house where a party would be started. People would play instruments and there would be dancing. There were miles between the houses, so people wouldn't get home until at least two o'clock in the morning. The adults would have house parties with dancing and conversing. These parties were the entertainment for the season.

In the winter they had to travel by sleighs. The horses would be harnessed with bells so that people could hear them coming. They would bundle up in blankets and kept heated stones by their feet. They had built a "caboose" on a sled with one set of runners. This was an enclosure with a window and a small opening for the reins to go through. When they rode in the regular sleigh, the children were covered in blankets and her father had a heavy fur coat and fur mittens to keep him warm while he prompted the horses. They didn't have benches in the sleigh; they sat on hay. If there were benches in a sleigh, people would slide back and forth if the road got too icy.

Christine said that when she was little there was more snow than there is now. They would slide down big hills of snow at school with the sleds they would have brought from home. By their house they also had a huge drift that she and her brothers and sisters could play on. One year the snow was so bad that her dad had to make an opening into the roof of the barn to get hay to the animals. She said she never figured out how he got the animals out of the barn. The roads were practically tunnels back then. When she was a teenager, cars still couldn't make it over the roads in the winter. The roads weren't really kept accessible year round until much later.

John Fredrickson
by Ingrid Morken

Since the day he was born, April 18, 1898, John Fredrickson has been a resident of Thief River Falls. In his youth he lived on a farm eight miles south of town along with six other brothers and sisters. Among them, he is the only one still living. Perhaps his vivacious spirit has helped him live such a long life.

When he was young, he enjoyed hunting and fishing and always "jumped around like a jackrabbit." His family raised cattle, turkeys, and chickens on their farm, and John was kept busy tending to them. The long, cold winters of northern Minnesota did not bother him much since he loved to ski. During his Christmas vacation, he spent hours outside skiing and playing in the snow with his brothers and sisters. On his outings he looked for a good Christmas tree. When he found the right one, he and his brothers carefully chopped it down and hauled it to the house. Everyone helped decorate it with home-made ornaments and cut-out snowflakes and paper dolls.

John has enjoyed the snow of Thief River Falls throughout his adult life as well. At the age of seventy-seven, he still skied and snowmobiled at high speeds.

Dorothy Berve
by Karmen Lee Ortloff

As a child, Dorothy Berve admits to being more than spoiled. The third and last child of her parents, Dorothy was a bit of an after thought when she was born in 1898. Dorothy's two older sisters were nine and fourteen years older and treated Dorothy as if she was their own child.

Christmas in her hometown of Bloomfield, Iowa centered around her church. Dorothy went to a small church six miles from town.

It was a very good church with a lot of young people and wonderful singing. The children would gather in the front of the church and start to sing "Silent Night," and before long, the entire congregation was joining in the singing.

After church services were finished, Dorothy's parents, along with other parents in the church, would head out to a neighbor's farm where they were treated to wonderful Sunday suppers of turkey, corn, apples, and every other food available. In fact, there was so much food on Dorothy's table when her family was the host, that she swears they literally wore out their walnut table!

While visiting neighbors for holiday feasts one neighbor was particularly memorable. The lady of the house brought many unusual vegetables from Switzerland when she immigrated and had lots of vegetables and cheeses that Dorothy has never seen or tasted since.

Dorothy had a cousin, Oral, that lived with her family. Oral was quite fond of Dorothy's mother and worked all summer to buy her a special Christmas present.

The two went into Bloomfield to do their Christmas shopping and on the ride home, Oral told Dorothy's mother that he had a present for her, but he wouldn't say what it was.

Dorothy's mother tried all night to get it out of Oral, but he wouldn't let go of his secret. Later that night, Dorothy's mother passed away, without ever finding out what Oral's gift was.

That was not a very good Christmas for Dorothy. Not only did her mother pass away, but all the cows got loose and refused to be herded, and their Christmas dinner didn't turn out.

Other Christmases went better. One year Dorothy's aunt sent her a special doll all the way from New York City. Dorothy's aunt Priscilla had to keep the doll so Dorothy wouldn't find it. On Christmas Eve, Oral rode over to Priscilla's farm, picked up the doll, helped Dorothy unwrap it, and then watched her add the doll to her already large collection.

After Dorothy married, she would invite all her neighbors over to her house on Main Street and cook a big dinner for them. This meal was delicious, but it was the meal the night before that Dorothy liked the best.

Dorothy and her husband had fresh oysters flown in from the coast for an extra special feast. As Dorothy and her husband slurped down the oysters, her husband would occasionally toss one to Dorothy's cat. Nothing was too good for Dorothy's cat, especially when Dorothy was having such a lovely Christmas.

Carrie Hermanson
by Ingrid Morken

Carrie Hermanson will be celebrating her ninety-third Christmas this year. Raised on a farm east of Goodridge, she has spent her whole life in the area. For Carrie and many people at the time she was young, Christmas wasn't celebrated as grandly as it is today. Money was scarce in many households, and gifts were hard to come by. Instead, people would use their imaginations to find joy in activities that cost no money.

For awhile near Goodridge, there was no church. The congregation Carrie and her family belonged to had to meet at members' houses until a church was built. Carrie was excited when she learned the Christmas Eve service would be held at her home one year. She and her family found a perfect Christmas tree, and her mother, an excellent cook, baked Christmas goodies. Families arrived in horse-drawn sleighs and fit cozily in the house where a fire blazed and Christmas cheer abounded. The congregation gathered around the lovely Christmas tree to sing carols led by the minister.

After the service, everyone went back to their own homes to enjoy a Christmas feast. Carrie emphasized that her mother was an excellent baker and fixed lutefisk masterfully. Hanging stockings for Santa Claus was a fun event for Carrie and her two sisters and six brothers. They received candy and apples, which were rare and special treats for them, although today such gifts seem meager. Carrie enjoyed modest Christmases as a child, but they were always times of joy and celebration.

Katherine Swanson
by Sara Tyler

Katherine Swanson and her family moved to Thief River Falls from Missouri when she was around seven years old. Christmas foods for her family were pretty much the same as now with the turkey dinner and Christmas cookies. Her family opened presents on Christmas Eve, but they didn't hang stockings for Santa. They decorated a tree by stringing popcorn and making paper decorations.

One special memory was that of the last doll she got for Christmas. Katherine was going to show her doll off. She tried to make it do a somersault to show her family, but they had clothes lines up. The doll hit the clothesline and broke. She said, "But we had other dolls."

A special event for her family each Christmas was the church program on Christmas Eve. Programs consisted of singing and reciting. One year while they were at the church for a rehearsal, a storm started. There had been snow on the ground for awhile, so they had taken the horses and sled to the church. They went out to the sled and bundled themselves up ready to leave. Well, when they tried to leave, the storm was so bad that they couldn't see the road. The horses had traveled it often, so they let the horses lead. Thanks to the horses memories, they made it home safely.

Christmas Hints

•Don't ask your child what he wants unless you intend giving it to him.

•Don't buy your best girl a present on the installment plan. She might jilt you before you had made all the payments.

•Rub the price-mark off the present unless it is an expensive one.

•The bachelor who puts his thumb into the boarding house Christmas pie is apt to pull out a collar button.

•Some persons never wish you a Merry Christmas unless they think they will get something for doing so.

Employer, anxiously: Does Mr. DeGood drink?
Confidential Clerk: Not a drop!
Employer: He has been two hours late for three mornings and he looks as if he had been on a terrible spree.
Clerk: It's all right. On Christmas he gave his boy a drum.

Don'ts for Christmas

● Don't forget that a basket of fruit or a box of flowers is just as nice a present in many cases as something that will last a good deal longer.

● Don't give your husband something he doesn't want just because you want it yourself or it will look nice in the parlor. This "don't" works the other way also, though men are not often sinners in this line.

● Don't think that you are too poor to keep Christmas. You can't be so poor as all that.

● Don't spend so much money on Christmas that you can't get even with the butcher and grocer until March.

● Don't give a drum to the children of your enemy who works nights. A watchman's rattle is just as good and it is cheaper.

Salvation Army Christmas Festivities

The Salvation Army will carry out its original plan to provide cheer and a good Christmas dinner to the needy people of this city. A basket-dinner consisting of the following articles will be given each family: one four-pound chicken, one peck potatoes, one half pound coffee, three pounds bread, a three pound can of baked beans, two pounds of sugar, one quart of cranberries, one can of condensed milk, one Christmas War Cry! (magazine).

From the Lincoln High School Progress

Friday's Chapel

Friday's chapel was a very unusual one and was enjoyed by everyone. Besides singing a few Christmas carols, the students had the opportunity to listen to some Christmas carols played on the victrola and also to the Hallelujah chorus, taken from the oratorio Messiah by Handel. The attitude displayed by the students certainly changed the minds of many who before this had had the opinion that all of us did not like to have singing chapels.

1932

—Christmas is only 20 shopping days distant and it will soon be too late to do it early. (Dec. 1, 1932)

—The recipient of Christmas gifts should doubly appreciate them if they are bought in hometown stores.

—The postal service will shortly be bothered by a blizzard in the form of Christmas greeting cards.

—Those who are counting on "Beer By Christmas" are likely to be pretty dry when Santa Claus arrives.

—Looks like a rhyme anyway:

"The winter charms of Mother Nature
Please youngsters more than us more mature."

—Some of those display windows downtown give those dimes and dollars a restless feeling.

—The next thing on the program is to bring home that Christmas tree.

—It still being leap year, the girls probably won't insist on a sprig of mistletoe for an excuse during the holidays.

—In about two days Dad will begin to think about doing his Christmas shopping. (Dec. 22, 1932)

Program of Activities For Next Year Discussed

The Home and Community group held its annual Christmas party on Thursday, December 11, in the Women's club room in the city auditorium. The meeting was called to order by the chairman Mrs. V. E. Copp. This year the committee will be finishing wooden trays as part of the activities for the winter month.

Following the business meeting the committee members exchanged their ideas of clever Christmas decorations and their favorite recipes.

This year, instead of exchanging Christmas gifts the group gave a pair of crutches to the firemen's loan closet. Many articles are available for use from this organization at little or no charge, including wheel chairs, hospital beds, polio pac steamer and an oxygen tent."

Overflow Crowd at Yule Concert

Lincoln High Musicians Give Excellent Program

Climaxing the holiday observance in local schools, the Christmas program presented Tuesday evening by Lincoln high school music groups attracted an overflow audience to the school, more than 100 persons being turned away.

Participating in the excellent rendition of Christmas music were the orchestra, directed by James Solsten and the senior choir, Lincoln Singers and junior high school chorus, all directed by Bryant Ulseth.

A Nativity scene graced the stage, with Everett Marshall, speech instructor, narrating the Christmas story. Gloria Philipp and Myrna Weckworth were student directors."

Mother's Twelve Days of Christmas

We had to chuckle knowingly at the following parody on the Twelve Days of Christmas as it appeared in the Northland state junior college newspaper: With those Twelve Days of Christmas,

My children gave to me:
Twelve splitting headaches,
Eleven aching stomachs,
Ten rounds of battle,
Nine toys quite broken,
Eight disagreements,
Seven gifts exchanges,
Six knees tape-bandaged,
Five truck bells clanging,
Four guns still banging,
Three spills at skating,
Two nervous breakdowns,
One look at homework
And weak needles on an almost green tree.

What Happened To Carols?

"One of the things which always used to help brighten spirits in the last couple of weeks before Christmas was the playing of Christmas carols on the radio. When circumstances permitted it was fun to hum, whistle or even sing along with the familiar songs of the season.

"It seems like this year in particular the airwaves have been filled with unusual, perhaps even bizarre, songs which have Christmas as their central theme. While working in the darkroom or traveling in the car when radio is not an interruption, we have been struck by the number of these oddball Christmas songs.

"There's a country-western song about looking around you at Christmas time and seeing Santa Claus and parents with liquor in their hands. There's a hysterical laughter version of 'Jingle Bells' and another with simulated dogs barking out the tune. Jimmy Jensen reminds us that he is one to 'Yost Go Nuts at Christmas.' And there are many others which have a tendency to make Christmas seem either depressing or meaningless.

"Perhaps it is necessary for stations to attempt to play music for all tastes, and even for those people who don't have any. Maybe the people at the turntables are bored with traditional carols. It could be that we are becoming more adverse to change in our advancing years. But we would like it a lot better if the music we hear at this time of year would be Christmas music instead of the junk we have been hearing."

I can show you a wide range of financial opportunities.

Today, These People are Much Less Dependent on Their Glasses or Contacts.

"I have fewer problems with smoke now."

"I'm not worried now about my glasses getting broken at a critical time."

"Now my vision is 20/20."

"My contacts were always popping out at critical times during the game."

"My glasses used to steam up under my welder's mask... not anymore."

"I couldn't wear contacts... and I like the way I look without glasses."

Your Eyes May Change. But Now, Thanks to Refractive Surgery, Your Vision Doesn't Have to.

Nearsightedness, Farsightedness, and Astigmatism. These common eye disorders are caused because some part of the eye is not shaped correctly. So, if you're one of the more than 100 million Americans who have one of these conditions, your eyes do not refract (bend) light rays the way they should. In fact, the front window of your eye (cornea) may actually focus light rays in front of or behind your retina.

The Hassle of Glasses and Contacts. Like many people, you may have grown accustomed to wearing glasses or contacts. For some people, however, glasses or contacts can be a potential hazard to their job. So, whether you or a family member are tired of wearing glasses or contacts for cosmetic appearance, athletic, or occupational reasons, Refractive Surgery may be worth looking into.

Refractive Surgery Works to Correct the Cause of Vision Problems. Through a microsurgical procedure, Refractive Surgery works by altering the shape of your cornea, thus changing the way your eye focuses light. The brief 20 minute outpatient procedure can correct vision to 20/40 or better in 90% of the cases. And even more reassuring is the fact that nearly 1,000,000 successful surgeries have been performed nationwide.

The Doctors' Eye Doctor: Richard Lindstrom, M.D. Because Dr. Lindstrom is widely regarded as a leader in corneal, cataract, refractive, and laser surgery, many Midwest eye doctors refer their most difficult patients to Dr. Lindstrom. So, it comes as no surprise that he is the eye specialist whom many physicians and their families see when they have eye disorders, especially those conditions requiring treatment or surgery of the anterior segment. In addition to his Minneapolis practice, Dr. Lindstrom lectures on eye disorders and surgery at national and international conferences. He also holds 15 patents in Ophthalmology for innovations including intraocular lens implants, surgical instruments, and solutions.

Fond Memories Of Russell "Huck" Olson

Few people we have known took as great an interest in sports—all sports—as "Huck" Olson, sports editor at the Thief River Falls Times from the 1930's until his death late in September of 1968 at the age of 62.

Huck was a quiet individual who shunned social events but thoroughly enjoyed people on a one-to-one basis. He wrote about people in his column called "Keeping Score" and his interest and insight, as well as his humor, made his column one of the best read parts of the paper by many readers, not only sports enthusiasts.

Sports were his life. A single person without family responsibilities, he spent most of his time at or around sporting activities. Limited in his own physical ability to compete by loss of a lung through a football injury, he immersed himself in the activities of others.

If a local high school football, basketball, baseball, hockey, wrestling or track team was in action, Huck was there. He followed the American Legion junior baseball team and the city league baseball team. He could be found at the softball diamonds, the curling arena, the bowling alley and the trap club. On Sunday mornings during deer season he would pick up a stack of Sunday papers and make the rounds of deer camps northeast of town, delivering papers and collecting items for his column. He even did a little hunting for grouse and pheasant—and wrote a lot about others who hunted more.

Huck never really over-indulged himself, but he appreciated quality. He bought Leica camera equipment because he had read it was the best. He had a chrome-plated ball on his car's trailer hitch, but we never knew him to tow a boat. His tackle box would open from gunwale to gunwale on most fishing boats and it was crammed with lures of every description. He wanted to be prepared in case someone might ask him to go fishing.

Despite being a person of modest means, he certainly spent more money for others than on extras for himself. Not infrequently he would buy football or baseball shoes for needy young athletes. If rural kids had no way to get home from practice or games, Huck would offer a ride. He would take four or five athletes to special events such as a Globetrotters game or UND hockey game.

And while he loved to needle some of his older cronies and acquaintances in print, he was careful not to criticize the mistakes of high school players or other amateur athletes.

Huck died years before today's Prowler athletes were born, but his life had a long-standing impact on the Thief River Falls athletic community. It is certainly appropriate to have the local hockey house named the Huck Olson Memorial Civic Center, as was commemorated in ceremonies last Tuesday evening.

And it was good to have six members of the first Lincoln high school state tournament hockey team—the state runner-up team of 1945—here for the dedication ceremonies during the Prowler hockey game with Warroad. We are sure that Ralph Engelstad, Wes Hovie, Lloyd "Sonny" Johnson, Durwood "Swede" Lund, Les Vigness and Jim Welch will remember the evening as they and many others remember Huck Olson—with many fond memories.

A Letter From Wes Hovie

While we are on the subject of dedication of the Huck Olson Memorial Civic Center, we would like to share a letter received by Dale Wennberg of the local arrangements committee from Wes Hovie, an all-state selection on the 1945 hockey team and now operator of Western Educational Sales in West Lynn, OR. Huck would have loved this letter:

Dear Dale:

Thank you for the invitation and as I understand it, you are suggesting that I:

(1) Leave the mild climate of Oregon in the most dangerous time of the year and fly to Minn. (the most harsh climate in the lower U.S.).....

(2) Leave my million dollar a year in sales corporation to my help who are of questionable competency for several days.....

(3) Eat another marginal meal at Lon's.....

(4) Attend a hockey game between a small town (TRF) and a hick town (Warroad) which will undoubtedly be one step above "shinney" hockey....

(5) Drive over 600 miles on snow packed roads with Jim Welch (round trip from Minneapolis) hoping that a Minnesota blizzard doesn't pop up and wipe us out....

(6) Spend anywhere from $500 to $700 of my hard earned money.

Well, Dale, I have to say this: Only a moron would take you up on such a golden opportunity as this.....

So, of course, I will be there!!!!
Sincerely,
Wes Hovie

Cattle industry to benefit from change in rules

"In response to a continued decline in the level of brucellosis in cattle nationwide, the Board of Animal Health and the livestock industry have eliminated some of the testing necessary to sell, show and import cattle," says Dr. Tom Hagerty, executive secretary for the Minnesota Board of Animal Health.

These changes were made possible by legislation that was passed in the 1992 legislature. This changed Minnesota statutes requiring change of ownership testing of breeding cattle for brucellosis and import testing of breeding cattle for anaplasmosis. These changes, which were supported by the Minnesota livestock industry, will decrease the cost of selling, showing and importing cattle, with no significant loss of disease control.

What this means to Minnesota farmers is testing will no longer be required when they sell a cow directly to another farmer, nor will a test be required when they show cattle. In addition testing will not be required for farm auctions. The law that required this testing has been in effect since 1945 and was instrumental in eradicating brucellosis from Minnesota. However, Minnesota has been Brucellosis-Free since October 1, 1984 and other forms of surveillance are now adequate to maintain this disease free status.

Another change that will affect Minnesota farmers is the brucellosis testing requirements for importing breeding cattle into Minnesota. Minnesota farmers will now be able to purchase breeding cattle from a farmer in another brucellosis-free state without testing them for brucellosis. A brucellosis retest 45 to 120 days after importation of breeding cattle will only be required if the cattle are from Texas, where the level of the disease is still significant.

These changes are possible due to the decline in cattle brucellosis in the United States. As of Sept. 30, 1992, there were only 415 brucellosis quarantined cattle herds in the nation. USDA's Rapid Completion Plan calls for the United States to be free of cattle brucellosis in five years. In the upper midwest, Wisconsin and North Dakota also are brucellosis-free. Iowa is expected to be free by September of 1993 and South Dakota by October of 1994.

The last major change that will affect Minnesota farmers is the anaplasmosis testing requirements for importing breeding cattle into Minnesota. Breeding cattle to be imported into Minnesota will only have to be tested for anaplasmosis if they are from states that have a significant level of the disease. This change is possible due to the regional distribution of the disease. The board was able to verify that there are areas of the country with relatively low levels of this disease and that the risk of introduction of the disease from those areas is no different than purchasing Minnesota cattle.

The net effect of the changes will be less regulation, decreased costs for Minnesota producers and no significant loss of disease control. The progress that was made with these changes was the result of cooperation between the livestock industry and the Board of Animal health.

Christmas Presents

by Patrikk Myhre

Last year, when Rikky was four, people gave him Christmas presents.

His mother gave him a football.

His father gave him a model airplane.

His brother gave him a great puzzle.

His sister gave him a jacket with his name on it.

Best of all, Rikky's family gave him a puppy named Pandora for Christmas.

But Rikky didn't have to choose presents for anyone, because he was four.

Now Rikky is five.

This year Rikky must choose presents for everyone. "What shall I do, Pandora?" Rikky wondered. "I know. I'll ask them what they want."

He asked his brother. "I want a sword," he said. But Rikky knew their mother had already said, "No!"

He asked his father. "I want an extra day off from work," he said. Rikky didn't think he could do anything about that.

He asked his mother. "I just want a hug," she told him. But somehow Rikky thought that just wasn't enough.

He asked his sister. "I want a pet boa constrictor," she said. This made Pandora nervous.

Rikky hugged Pandora and said, "I wish you could help me." Pandora barked. This made Rikky think of when he and Pandora had played tag the day after Thanksgiving. Pandora had barked and barked and they had run all over the house and made a big mess.

Rikky thought about the things they had played with that day. Pandora chased Rikky and he had bumped into his brother's shelf and knocked his baseball glove onto the floor. Then Pandora chewed on it.

Then Rikky chased Pandora and Pandora knocked over Rikky's mother's lipstick from her dresser. Pandora licked on it so she said she had to throw it away.

Then Pandora chased Rikky and they bumped into Rikky's father's fishing rod and it broke in half.

Then Rikky chased Pandora and they had gotten tired out, so Rikky fell asleep and Pandora chewed up Rikky's sister's pillow.

Rikky hugged Pandora. "I know," he said. "You have given me a lot of good ideas!"

This year Rikky gave his father a new fishing rod.

He gave his mother a new lipstick.

Rikky gave brother a baseball glove.

And he gave his sister a new pillow.

This year Rikky's mother gave him a soccer ball.

Rikky's father gave his a set of tools.

Rikky's brother gave him a beginning cookbook.

And Rikky's sister gave him a bright red cap and mittens.

And the whole family gave Pandora a leash.

Clementine "Tiny" Cochran
by Ingrid Morken

As the "baby of the family," Clementine "Tiny" Cochran was considered spoiled by her older sisters. Her father didn't give her many chores to do, but if he left, her sisters gave her plenty. They made her scrub the floors and do many of the chores they were supposed to do. With sisters like this and a mean step-mother too, her story almost sounds like Cinderella.

When Tiny was still a toddler, her mother died tragically. While cleaning the floors for Christmas one year, lye entered an open wound and poisoned her. Tiny's father eventually remarried, and Tiny and her new step-mother never got along. Tiny admitted that she was often naughty and probably deserved the punishments her step-mother gave her. Her father owned and operated a general store in Winnipeg, and sometimes Tiny snuck in and pretended she worked there. She advised the customers on what to purchase and occasionally even told them that certain items were on sale that really were not. Of course, her father didn't appreciate this and was stern with her when he discovered her antics.

Christmas was celebrated a little differently in Tiny's French family. On Christmas Eve her family went to church and opened a few gifts, but the big festivities were held on New Year's Eve. An enormous feast was prepared, including roast pork, mashed potatoes, cranberries, and wine. Families and friends gathered together to sing and dance and play games. This was one of the only times when her entire family got along.

Alice Lendobeja
by Maren Dyrud

As a child, Alice Lendobeja lived twelve miles southeast of Thief River Falls about two miles from highway number one. She had two sisters who were much older than she, so she spent most of her childhood with her nieces, who were closer to her age.

Alice remembers that on trips to Thief River Falls for holiday baking supplies, her mother would also buy rag doll patterns to make as gifts for Alice and her nieces. The patterns already had faces painted on them, so her mother would cut them out, sew and stuff them, and then make their clothes. She would make dresses and coats that were detailed with little buttons and buttonholes. Her mother was an expert seamstress. Alice said that she could make buttonholes "like nobody's business." They didn't have a sewing machine—she did it all by hand. Her mother would hide the dolls high on a shelf in a wardrobe, but that didn't stop Alice from peeking. She would climb up on their old ladder-back rocker to catch a glimpse of them, but she never let on about her discovery.

Besides preparing the Christmas gifts, Alice's mom also spent a great deal of time preparing the foods for the coming Christmas season. Her mother selected special cuts of beef to make into dried beef. Alice commented that when she was little, the dried beef was handy for pulling out her loose teeth. Her mother also used a pig's head to create head cheese, and the pigs' feet had to be pickled in time for Christmas, too.

A section above their kitchen cupboard was curtained off to make a dry place for flatbread to be stored. Her mother would stack huge sheets of it from the top of that cupboard to the ceiling. Alice picked wild strawberries earlier in the year, and her mother would save the finest quart for dessert during Christmas.

One Christmas when she was very young, her dad brought her out to the barn, and had her look around at its humble furnishings and the animals. He explained to her that Christ was born in a place very similar to it. This made a great impact on Alice, and is a very dear memory of hers, since her father suffered a stroke after that Christmas. Her family didn't have a Christmas tree, but after her father had had his stoke, Alice placed an oak branch in a jar and decorated with paper flowers so her father could have a Christmas tree. In those days money and supplies were not abundant, but imagination and creativity made up for that.

Margaret Bjornberg
by Karmen Lee Ortloff

Growing up in the late teens and early twenties, Margaret Bjornberg from Lake Bronson never had a Christmas tree. As a result, she and her twelve brothers and sisters would go to their neighbor's home and help them decorate their tree.

Few people back then had their own trees and decorating a neighbor's tree was just as special to Margaret and her brothers and sisters. They would decorate trees with popcorn and cranberries they had strung that night. Clip-on Candle holders were attached all over the tree for lights and a beautiful doll was usually set upon the top of the tree.

The Bjornberg's didn't have a lot of extra money to spend on Christmas presents, so their mother would take in loads of laundry from local bachelors. As payment for her work, Margaret's mother was often given big bags full of wool. From the wool, yarn was made and Margaret's mother would stay up late every day in December in order to knit hats, scarves, socks, mittens, any item of clothing the family needed by Christmas Day. It wasn't much, but everyone loved the fine clothing their mother had worked so long and hard on.

Because Margaret's father was a carpenter, there were a lot of extra pieces of wood lying around. Once, Margaret decided to make herself a present out of the scraps.

Nailing together pieces of wood, Margaret tried to make a crib for her favorite doll. It didn't work.

Even an experienced carpenter like her dad couldn't fix the crib. He tried though! First he hollowed out the inside and sanded it smooth. Then he tried to curve the wooden slabs on the bottom to make a cradle out of it. Nothing worked, so Margaret never got a crib for her doll that year. She didn't mind it though, she was thankful for her mother's gift and she wore it proudly.

As Margaret raised her own family, she developed new traditions. One was going tobogganing with her children.

Margaret's sons thought that getting mom on a sled and then pushing her down a hill into a pile of snow was the best thing about winter! Margaret was a good sport about her sons pranks as she dutifully trugged up the hill dozens of times only to be pushed back down on her long sled by her laughing sons.

Even after the arrival of her daughter, who didn't much care for the snow bank prank, Margaret still allowed her sons to take her out and send her down the hill. Margaret will admit that this was, despite all the bumps and bruises, one of her favorite Christmas traditions.

Alf Lokken
by Karmen Lee Ortloff

Going to a country school, Alf Lokken experienced a different kind of environment from that of schools today. In Custer, Montana, Alf went to a one room school house at the turn of the century.

The school program was the big event of Christmas season, but Alf refused to participate. He was mad at his teacher.

Alf was left handed, something that wasn't accepted when he went to school. His teacher forced him to switch hands. Always a little sneaky, Alf would trade hands when he thought his teacher wasn't looking. He was caught by his teacher who immediately shoved a pencil into his fist for disobeying him.

Alf ran home crying and told this story to his dad. Alf's father was a big man who worked on the railroad and didn't take too kindly to someone poking his son.

Alf's father rode a horse to the home at where the teacher was staying and told Alf's teacher in a less than friendly way that he had better not touch his son.

With the teacher out of the way, Alf thought everything would be all right, but it wasn't. His hand became infected and Alf had to go to the doctor in Billings, Montana.

Even with a doctor's note stating that Alf couldn't write with his right hand, Alf still didn't want to go back to school.

With the Christmas program closing in rapidly, Alf's dad was not going to let his son miss school or the Christmas program, so Alf had to go to school. He didn't have to write that day though.

Alf went to the Christmas program, just like his dad made him, but he refused to sing.

That night, Alf came home to a beautiful Christmas tree that his mother had decorated sometime while Alf was out. It was decorated with red and green bulbs, bright bows and strings of popcorn. It was beautiful and made Alf forget about school for a little while.

Seeing the tree, Alf suddenly felt bad that he hadn't made his parents a gift, but they were happy to see their son in the Christmas program. Of course, they would have been happier had he sang, nonetheless, they were pleased.

After Christmas vacation was over, and Alf was forced to go back to school, he wrote with his left hand. But Alf still didn't like his teacher.

Unveiling of the photo of Russell (Huck) Olson, which will hang in the Huck Olson Memorial Civic Center in Thief River Falls, took place at a dinner preceding dedication ceremonies Tuesday evening at the civic center, formerly called the Sports Arena. The unveiling was done by Elizabeth Hylden of Minneapolis, whose late husband Jerry was a member of the first Lincoln high school hockey team to participate in a state tournament in 1945. Jerry is credited with suggesting naming the arena for Olson, a long-time sports writer for the Thief River Falls Times, who was noted for his personal work with young athletes in the community.

R.L. Watershed board at meeting

Board and staff members of the Red Lake Watershed District attended the 22nd annual meeting of the Minnesota Association of Watershed Districts (MAWD) at Cragun's Lodge and Conference center at Brainerd December 3-5, according to Lowell Enerson, administrator.

Attending in addition to Enerson were Vernon Johnson, Clearwater county, board president; Russell Sander, East Polk county, board secretary; Gerhard Ross, West Polk county, treasurer; Arlan Fore, Red Lake county and Verner Arveson, Pennington county, members of the board of managers; Kevin Adolf, district engineer; and Neil McEwen, legal counsel.

Watershed districts are local units of government responsible for managing surface water in a watershed—an area in which all water drains to one outlet. The Red Lake Watershed District has been involved in such projects as Moose River, Black River, Elm Lake, Burnham Creek, Pine Lake, water allocation to rice growers, river garbage clean-up and the Clearwater river nonpoint water quality study.

"This annual meeting allows us to find out about other districts' successes and the challenges that they face," Enerson said. "Learning about the different water management issues that are important in other areas of the state helps us do our jobs better."

John Riley, former chief of staff for Gov. Arne Carlson, spoke at the meeting during Friday's lunch. He said that Minnesota's projected $769 million budget shortfall will be the defining issue of the upcoming legislative session and stressed the need for reform. "I think it is really important to understand that these shortfalls result from structural imbalances," Riley said.

The meeting included several informational workshops, general business and discussion and voting on resolutions. More than 200 people attended the conference.

Vernon Johnson of the Red Lake Watershed District board was reelected to the board of directors of the state association. Elected president of the MAWD board was Howard Peterson of the Riley-Purgatory-Bluff Creek watershed district.

Other officers are Gerald Van Amburg, Buffalo-Red River watershed district, vice president; Loren Harste, Upper Minnesota River watershed district, secretary; and Dean Olson, Buffalo Creek watershed district, treasurer.

Other directors in addition to Johnson are Willard Pearson, Lac Qui Parle-Yellow Bank watershed district; Roland Gullickson, Sand Hill River watershed district; Al Dornfield, Valley Branch watershed district; and Allen Kudak, Nine Mile Creek watershed district.

Minnesota has 41 watershed districts, covering about 25 per cent of the state. Each district is governed by a board of managers appointed by the boards of commissioners of counties with land within the district. Watershed districts are established through local petition.

Unveiling of the photo of Russell (Huck) Olson, which will hang in the Huck Olson Memorial Civic Center in Thief River Falls, took place at a dinner preceding dedication ceremonies Tuesday evening at the civic center, formerly called the Sports Arena. The unveiling was done by Elizabeth Hylden of Minneapolis, whose late husband Jerry was a member of the first Lincoln high school hockey team to participate in a state tournament in 1945. Jerry is credited with suggesting naming the arena for Olson, a long-time sports writer for the Thief River Falls Times, who was noted for his personal work with young athletes in the community.

R.L. Watershed board at meeting

Board and staff members of the Red Lake Watershed District attended the 22nd annual meeting of the Minnesota Association of Watershed Districts (MAWD) at Cragun's Lodge and Conference center at Brainerd December 3-5, according to Lowell Enerson, administrator.

Attending in addition to Enerson were Vernon Johnson, Clearwater county, board president; Russell Sander, East Polk county, board secretary; Gerhard Ross, West Polk county, treasurer; Arlan Fore, Red Lake county and Verner Arveson, Pennington county, members of the board of managers; Kevin Adolf, district engineer; and Neil McEwen, legal counsel.

Watershed districts are local units of government responsible for managing surface water in a watershed—an area in which all water drains to one outlet. The Red Lake Watershed District has been involved in such projects as Moose River, Black River, Elm Lake, Burnham Creek, Pine Lake, water allocation to rice growers, river garbage clean-up and the Clearwater river nonpoint water quality study.

"This annual meeting allows us to find out about other districts' successes and the challenges that they face," Enerson said. "Learning about the different water management issues that are important in other areas of the state helps us do our jobs better."

John Riley, former chief of staff for Gov. Arne Carlson, spoke at the meeting during Friday's lunch. He said that Minnesota's projected $769 million budget shortfall will be the defining issue of the upcoming legislative session and stressed the need for reform. "I think it is really important to understand that these shortfalls result from structural imbalances," Riley said.

The meeting included several informational workshops, general business and discussion and voting on resolutions. More than 200 people attended the conference.

Vernon Johnson of the Red Lake Watershed District board was reelected to the board of directors of the state association. Elected president of the MAWD board was Howard Peterson of the Riley-Purgatory-Bluff Creek watershed district.

BIBLE STUDY

The mistake of the Pharisees

After you read through this Bible study, go back and look up the Scriptures and highlight them in your Bible.

The fatal mistake of the Pharisees was that they were doing righteousness for the wrong reasons. They were doing righteous acts to be seen of men and not to glorify God (Matt. 5:16). Jesus was constantly reminding them of what they were doing wrong but they were living so much to the flesh, they couldn't hear the words of the Spirit (Matt. 9:13; 12:7; Prov. 21:3).

Jesus was telling the Pharisees how to clean the inside of the cup by being true servants to others so they wouldn't be hypocrites (Matt. 23:11, 25). He was telling them how to enter the kingdom of heaven within (Matt. 23:13; Luke 17:21). This is the key to knowledge of how to be truly converted from the inside.

In the example of the good Samaritan, Christ was showing the Pharisees that the people they called religious fakes were more compassionate to the needy than they were (Luke 10:30-37). Those who handled the Law of Moses were holding people back, keeping from them the keys to the kingdom (Luke 11:52). The understanding of how to enter the kingdom was then given to Peter (Matt. 16:19). Peter knew what the Pharisees were doing wrong. Many Pharisees did repent and become obedient to the faith (Acts 6:7).

Unrepentant sinners do bad works. Repentant sinners do good works for God—works meant for repentance (Acts 26:20). Performing good works for God by imitating Jesus Christ's works is how you overcome the deeds of the flesh (Rev. 2:26). You live to the Spirit (Rom. 8:13-14). Then you don't carry out the desires of the flesh (Gal. 5:16).

Once you put your hand to the plow, which represents doing good works for God, don't look back or get weary of well-doing (Gal. 6:9; 2 Thess. 3:13). Soon you will be a new creation with Christ formed in you (Gal. 6:15; 4:19). Then you will be complete (2 Cor. 13.9, 11). You will also be a peculiar person, zealous for good works and not worthless, but worth more (Titus 2:14; 1:16).

This is the knowledge of the truth which is according to godliness and it requires discipline (Titus 1:1; 1 Tim. 4:7). If anyone advocates a different doctrine than this, he is conceited and understands nothing (1 Tim. 6:3-4).

Be a sheep and not a goat (Matt. 25:33-46). Allow God to crush Satan (your old nature) under your heel (Rom. 16:20). Soon, as a happy slave of Christ, you will be doing the Will of God from your heart and will escape from the snare of the devil which traps others to do his will (Eph. 6.6; 2 Tim. 2:26). You will not be caught making the same mistake the Pharisees of old made.

Food safety emphasized for holidays

U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) wishes to make the public aware of several circumstances regarding holiday food safety.

The FDA warns that raw eggs, used by many in making eggnog, may be possible carriers of Salmonella enteritidis and recommends that pasteurized eggs be used instead of shell eggs whenever possible.

"If you choose to use shell eggs," the FDA states, "use only Grade A or better eggs and avoid eggs that are cracked or leaking. Discard the egg if any shell falls into the egg. Leave eggs in their original carton and store them in the main section of the refrigerator, not the egg section in the door which has a higher temperature."

Food additives and food coloring are safe to use in baking and cooking, the FDA says. The agency has either permanently approved or terminated approval of more than 140 color additives.

Silver Decors (Dragees) are intended to be used for decoration only but the FDA has found no evidence of harm to health from the extremely small quantity of silver in the coating and does not object to use of the decorations on cakes or cookies.

Seafood is another concern of the FDA since it is used extensively during the holidays. Buy seafood only from reputable dealers and cook it no later than two days after purchase. It should not smell unpleasant or "fishy." Store fresh fish cold in the same wrapper it had in the store. Do not store live shellfish in airtight containers or in water.

The safest way to thaw frozen seafood is in its own container in the refrigerator. Allow one to two days for defrosting. Properly cooked fish will flake easily with a fork and should be opaque and firm; it shouldn't be translucent.

Persons with questions about foods or who need more information may contact the FDA public affairs office at 240 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, MN 55401.

Tapes offered to help curb child abuse

Video-taped materials relative to the prevention of child maltreatment, parent/child relationships and positive family functioning are available to the public through the Pennington County Child Abuse Prevention Council (CAPC).

It is the intention of the CAPC that these materials, provided through a grant from the Children's Trust Fund, be available throughout Pennington county as part of the council's objectives to prevent child maltreatment and enhance family functioning.

Topics included in the videos are appropriate for human service agencies and providers, schools, churches, civic organizations and the general public.

The council invites and encourages use of the videos by groups, families or individuals to supplement ongoing educational efforts as well as for general information purposes.

Northwest Regional Library in Thief River Falls is the site selected to house and maintain these videos and may be contacted to obtain further information regarding topics, titles and current availability.

When people offer you one last drink, do you always take it?
Do you even ask for "one for the road?" Why not? Nothing can happen with YOU behind the wheel. At least, nothing ever has.
On the other hand, drinking and driving spell accidents. Will you always be so lucky?
So, do yourself a favour. Increase the odds by turning down that drink. Or, if you've had too much, call a taxi — or walk home — or let somebody else take the wheel. But don't drive.
That way, you'll always be a winner.

We remember our days with you

Knowing how much you loved and cared

In memory you're with us yet
In our hearts we never forget

In loving memory of Olga (Mrs. Olaf) Ryan who passed away December 12th, 1977.

Dearly loved and sadly missed by her family.

PUBLIC NOTICE

The CITY OF THIEF RIVER FALLS Water Department announces that the maximum limit for Turbidity in drinking water was exceeded during the month of November 1992.

Turbidity is caused by the presence of finely suspended particles such as clay, sand, or organic matter in water. Turbidity can be a problem if it interferes with the Chloramine used for disinfection. However the high turbidity level did not create a health hazard because the Water Department is able to maintain effective levels of chloramine for disinfection.

The Thief River Falls Water Purification Plant is currently in the construction stage of a $7 million dollar expansion and remodeling project. This project will enable compliance with the water quality requirements of the 1986 Amendments to the Safe Drinking Water Act.

Please be assured that the water is safe to drink. Any citizen seeking additional information should contact Allen J. Lemm, at the Water Purification Plant, phone number 681-3809.

Aviaries add to life for C&NC residents

[illegible] who suggested the idea [illegible] after hearing about them at a workshop during the state convention of hospital auxiliaries, is also pleased by the acceptance and interest.

"We heard a lot about the therapeutic value for residents," she said. "But we hadn't counted on the [illegible] interest from visitors and staff. Many people seem to take a personal interest in the birds and there is always someone in the area of the enclosures watching them."

The enclosures and the birds are provided by a company called Living Design, Inc., at Sioux Falls, SD, which started in business about 10 years ago. The aviaries are larger, easier to maintain and better lit now than the earlier types and the birds are more of the singing/chattering types.

"We've found that people don't always have time to stop and watch the birds but they always love to listen to them," notes Jerry Brooke of Living Design, Inc.

"To our knowledge, this is the only project of its type in the world," he continued. "We have developed virtually every aspect of [illegible]

[illegible] cooperation of the [illegible] administration and [illegible] with an interest in [illegible] take care of the weekly [illegible]. The providing company is under contract to make [illegible] visits, replacing birds [illegible] and removing birds which have hatched to keep the population in balance.

Several of the species of birds are paired and nesting areas are provided. Part of the attraction is in watching the parents raise their offspring. Other birds, such as a canary, are provided only singly since they are more vocal when alone and more territorially aggressive when paired. Species are selected for their compatibility with other species as well as their willingness to reproduce in the aviary conditions.

Hundreds of the Living Design aviaries are now in place in nursing and retirement homes, public libraries, schools, hospitals, colleges, churches, motel/convention centers, businesses and private homes in North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Illinois and Wisconsin.

Northwest Medical Center Auxiliary has about 200 members and earns its income from a number of operations involving the hospital, including the flower and gift shop, coffee shop, soft drink and other vending machines, television rental in patient rooms, Life Alert system rentals and infant and chil[illegible] was initial.

Virtually all of the [illegible] are conducted with [illegible] from the auxiliary [illegible] and all profits earned are put back into [illegible] to assist the medical center, such as the aviaries installed within the past several weeks.

The auxiliary also sews lap robes for medical center patients, donates teddy bears to children hospitalized in the pediatrics unit, donates food and serves a holiday tea for medical center employees and takes on other special service projects.

Sandy Parker, director of the C&NC unit, says she is well aware of the interest in and concern for the birds in the new aviaries, as well as the lack of an established procedure concerning them. For instance, since it is recommended the birds be fed a hard boiled egg, chopped up including the shell, the dietary department has instituted a dietary card for the bird with those instructions on it.

And shortly after the aviaries were installed, Mrs. Parker received a call at 3 a.m. from a staff member wondering what to do when one of the birds was found dead at that time in the morning.

Parker was one of those who had discussed the possibility of the aviaries with the medical center's administration and recommended that they be acquired. Despite the early morning call she remains enthusiastic about the birds and the response of residents, staff and visitors to them.

"They give the residents a focus outside their rooms and something to talk about with family members and other visitors," she said. "We're all waiting for the first nest of baby birds. That should make for a lot of interest and conversation."

Northwest Medical Center Auxiliary has donated two aviaries to the convalescent and nursing care (C&NC) unit of the medical center, one located on each of the two resident floors in the lobby area near the elevators. Judy Dimich (left), president of the auxiliary, and Joan Strong, a member of the auxiliary who suggested the aviaries after hearing about them at a state convention workshop, are shown with one of the residents at the first floor aviary. A variety of birds in the enclosures provide activity and color for viewers.

Troy Carlson receives kidney for Christmas

After 70 surgeries, 22-year-old gets what he really wanted

by David Hill
Associate Editor

Christmas came early for 22-year-old Troy Carlson of Thief River Falls. On December 11 Carlson underwent his 70th operation and received a new kidney. With the kidney already functioning well, Troy may be able to come home one day during Christmas.

Troy's kidney problems first became evident when he was seven weeks old, recounted his mother Kathy. He spent his first Christmas in the hospital.

Troy is doing well at Hennepin County Medical Center, she said. He has received many cards and telephone calls and is feeling better than he has ever felt.

The Carlsons had been preparing for this day for more than a year. Troy had his kidneys removed in October of last year. After his kidneys were removed he was put on the national transplant list and began dialysis. He has been traveling to United Hospital in Grand Forks, ND, three times a week for dialysis. The Carlsons also arranged for two planes to be on standby when he needed a ride to Minneapolis. Sen. LeRoy Stumpf of Thief River Falls and Jim Holte of Grygla had agreed to fly Troy to Minneapolis in case he needed to get down there quickly. But when the day came, it came suddenly and all the plans were for naught. Despite the fact that the carefully laid plans didn't fall in place everything went very smoothly, Kathy said.

On Thursday, December 10, they were called and told the hospital had a kidney that matched, but neither of the planes they had on standby were available. Kathy, always optimistic, confessed that she began to panic. As it so happens, the Mesaba flight to Thief River Falls that day arrived late. Kathy regained some of her composure and called Sheriff Bob Wold and asked him to try and hold the plane.

By the time Troy arrived at the airport, Sheriff Wold had held the plane up and Annette Bruggeman had a boarding pass waiting for him. The pass came as a result of kindness Troy had shown the Bruggemans.

On one of Troy's many trips to Grand Forks, he stopped to assist motorists in a vehicle parked along the road near Sherack late one night. The motorists turned out to be Annette Bruggeman and her husband. Annette works for Mesa-

SWCD recognized for conservation support

Early participants recall days at conservation camp

by Marvin Luodio
Times Editor

Value of the Pennington County Soil and Water Conservation District's sponsorship of students over a 25-year period to attend the Long Lake Conservation Camp was verified when early participants said they not only remembered their experiences but that the trip influenced their lives.

The SWCD received a plaque Monday, December 21, in recognition of 25 consecutive years of sponsorship of students to the camp. There have been 35 Pennington county youngsters who have attended the camp during that time under local SWCD sponsorship.

Mitch Kezar, son of Dennis and Betty Kezar of Thief River Falls, was the first local young person selected to attend the camp in 1967. He was followed by Paula Mickelson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Mickelson of Goodridge in 1968 and Michael Hanson, son of Lynn and Norma Hanson of Goodridge in 1969. All have pleasant memories of their experiences.

Robert L. Schwaderer, executive director of the Long Lake Conservation Center at Palisade, made the long drive to Thief River Falls Monday to present the 25-year service plaque to the local board. Daniel Johnson of Goodridge, board chairman, accepted the award for the district.

Schwaderer told the board that only two other 25-year awards were presented this year—one to the Kiwanis Club of Southwest Minneapolis, which has sponsored 69 campers, and one to the New Ulm Izaak Walton League of America chapter which has sponsored 50 students. There were also three five-year, four 10-year, one 15-year and three 20-year awards presented.

Pennington SWCD has participated as a sponsor in the conservation center's Conservation Leadership School (CLS), a five-day summer program of environmental and conservation education. The center also has a school year program which is attended by more than 6,000 young people each year.

Kezar Says Camp Was First Stay Away From Home

"I would have to say my trip to conservation camp was one of the most memorable things of my childhood," recalls Mitch Kezar, the first trip winner and now a free-lance photographer who lives in Minneapolis. "I pretty much grew up on the farm and didn't go much of anywhere and camp was my first stay away from home."

He said the camp started his interest in ecology, although he had always like the outdoors and read all of his uncle's sporting magazines that he could get his hands on.

"It was the first place I heard that new word that was just starting to be used then—'environment'—and I even learned how to spell it. And it was the first place I ever saw anyone use a fly rod for fishing. I though it was kind of neat and I remember thinking that I wanted to try that some day."

Kezar said the campers made a trip to the Blandin Paper Company

Pennington County Soil and Water Conservation District will have a new board member to begin the new year. Clair Larson (left) has been a board member for 22 years but recently moved from his district and was ineligible for reelection. Elected to succeed him was Darrow Lundeen of Trail. They are shown during a meeting of the board Monday at the SWCD office.

Eye surgeries provide a new outlook on life

by Mark Olson
Staff Writer

Surgery helped Lowell Swenson see things more clearly. A retired Thief River Falls businessman, Swenson suffered cataracts and deteriorating corneas. His eyes started going downhill about ten years ago and he has undergone four eye surgeries.

About six years ago Swenson had his first cornea and lens transplant beginning his way to "rebuilt eyes." "I'm starting life all over again. I have 20/20 vision with glasses. It's unbelievable really," Swenson said.

One and a half year later Swenson had another cornea and lens transplant for his other eye.

In the last couple of years, Swenson had radial keratotomy, a procedure which corrects nearsightedness by making spoke-like incisions around the cornea.

The operation gave him 20/20 vision in one eye and 20/15 vision in the other. Now Swenson only wears glasses. Before the operation he wore contact lenses and glasses.

Before the cornea transplant, Swenson said he was almost legally blind. "I had to have big magnifying glasses. I couldn't read papers or anything really."

Swenson couldn't drive a car or pursue hobbies such as hunting and Lowell Swenson can read with ease after undergoing cornea transplants, lens implants and refractive surgery. Before the surgeries, activities such as driving were extremely limited. The surgeries took place over the past six years.

Quillow

(Pillow which opens into a lap quilt)

First go ahead and cut your pillow, lining, and pellon fleece as instructed for the pillow and quilt. You will make the pillow first so set the other material aside for the quilt.

Directions on making of the Pillow for Quillow:

1. Cut off one of the pillow panels across the bottom of the 2 yards material. (if not pillow panels cut a 16 inch strip off the end of the 45 inch material.)
2. Cut one of the pillow panels (should be approximately 16 x 16 inches.) The remaining two panels can be decorative pillows on your sofa or whereever you would like to use them.
3. Layer the pellon fleece (16" x 16") next to lining (16" x 16") with right side up, and place the pillow panel (16" x 16") with right sides together against the lining.
4. Pin around the pillow panel leaving the bottom side open. This will be where you will turn the pillow inside out.
5. Beginning on the lower left corner sew around the three sides with 1/4" seam ollowance, leaving the bottom open for turning.
6. Trim excess batting, press seams and turn right sides out. Press seams again if necessary.
7. After turning pin under 1/4" seam and hand stitch opening close.

Optional - Quilt as desired

Optional - Top stitch 1/4" from edge around all four sides

8. Set pillow aside until the lap quilt is constructed.

Directions on making of the Lap Quilt:

1. Corefully cut bocking (coordinote) so it is exoctly the same size as the top.
2. Cut the batting the same size as the top (usually 12 to 15 pillow squares). Layer the pellon fleece, backing with right sides up and quilt top with right sides down (same as pillow). This will make right sides together.
3. Make sure all edges are even, pin in several places to avoid shifting.
4. Beginning at the lower left corner (same as pillow) sew around all three sides with a 1/4" seom allowance ond leaving the bottom open for turning.
5. Trim excess botting, press seams and turn right sides out.
6. After turning right side out pin under 1/4" seom and hond stitch opening closed.

Optional - Quilt if desired

Optional - Tie with yarn in various places being careful not to catch all three loyers.

Completing the Quillow:

1. Place the pillow (pocket) for quillow on top of the bottom center of the quilt matching bottom edges. Leaving the top edge of the pillow open sew the pillow as o pocket onto the quilt with 12 to 14 stitches per inch. Sew around the edge (leaving the top open) of the pocket with a 1/8" to 1/4" seam allowance. You will be sewing thru all 6 thickness.

Folding of Quillow:

With quilt facing up fold it into thirds. Staning at the top fold ogain into thirds or fourths (Depending on the number of pillow panels in the quilt).

Option one: Tuck quilt into pillow pocket

Option Two: Pull pillow pocket totally over the quilt turning the pillow pocket inside out with the outside of quilt showing the design and the back side of quilt showing the lining material.

Speaking Of...

by Sharon LaCoursiere

...These are the Last Few Days Before Christmas

Christmas is nearly upon us. Are you ready?

All through December I have cringed every time someone asked things like, "Have you finished your shopping, yet?" "Do you have your tree up?" "Is your baking done?" "Have you mailed your Christmas cards?"

Questions like these are always followed by the statement, "Oh, I've been done with mine for several weeks." Ugh, how I hate to hear people say that.

I have an idea about those people who are done with everything several weeks before Christmas and always ask those awful questions of me. I think they are bored silly and jealous of those of us who are still hustling and bustling around trying to get things done. Really, I do!

It is so much more fun to be in on the holiday excitement these last few days before Christmas, when the stores are blasting out jolly carols and aisles are packed with last minute shoppers who have nothing in mind other than gift-buying, buying, buying.

It is so much more fun to shop for gifts when everything is on sale and you can find that "perfect" gift for Aunt Mary or Uncle John at half price, provided you can reach through that crush of last minute shoppers and grab it before someone else does.

It is so much more fun to bring all of these wonderful, "perfect" gifts home, turn on the Christmas carols, drag out the wrapping paper and ribbon and hide yourself away to wrap them quickly, racing to get them wrapped before the time when your family is ready to tear them open.

Just think, when you do your shopping the last minute, children who try to peek at their presents before Christmas will find nothing but dust balls under your bed and in your closet, because there won't be any presents. You can tell them you aren't giving them anything this year, and they will be really surprised at Christmas, for once.

It is so much more fun to fill the house with the spicy smells of Christmas baking right before the holiday, when everyone is home to help bake and decorate (as well as eat everything as soon as it is out of the oven before you can pack it away). Too bad they don't stick around for the kitchen clean-up.

It is so much more fun to spend the night before Christmas decorating the tree with the family, singing jolly Christmas songs and trying to find a string of lights that works and keep the children from breaking all of the ornaments and find the angel for the top of the tree because the stores are now closed and you can't get downtown to buy more of those things.

It is so much more fun to forget Christmas cards altogether and make day-before or Christmas calls to friends and relatives instead. Never mind that they are also in the midst of holiday preparation or celebration and that it will cost you a lot more than a stamp would have.

Yes, I'm sure those people who finished everything early and are spending these last few days before Christmas enjoying an egg nog and o pretty Christmas cookie with their feet up while they listen to Christmas carols and read the Christmas cards they received in the light of their twinkling, decorated Christmos tree with oll the beautifully-wrapped presents under it are really bored to tears but just don't want to let it show. You can just imagine how much they envy those of us who are rushing around right now, can't you? Poor them, lucky us!

But I certainly do wish you all o Merry Christmas, even if you are one of those poor people who are finished with oll of your Christmas preparations.

County SWCD gets conservation award

in Grand Rapids (the conservation camp is located on Long Lake near McGregor and Aitkin) and he remembers standing by a huge vat looking out the window at the Mississippi river.

About 20 years later his memory was revived as he was standing in the same place, shooting photos of the vat for a historical document for a Blandin historical document as it was being replaced by new technology and equipment.

And he had not only tried his hand at fly fishing but become addicted to it, casting lures to fish all across the North American continent.

He also learned canoeing techniques at the camp and has since paddled thousands of miles. And after once getting off the farm he has scarcely stopped moving, now traveling some 250,000 to 300,000 miles a year in his photography pursuits.

"There weren't any Discovery channels back in those days," Kezar said. "Conservation camp was the first opportunity for me to break away from the normal courses I got in middle school." Mitch carried the conservation project for a number of years in the City View 4-H club and said he thinks he wrote a theme to win the conservation camp trip.

Paulo Mickelson Syltie Says Camp Heightened Interest

"I remember I had never used a compass before I went to conservation camp," says Mrs. Howard Syltie of Porter, the former Paulo Mickelson of rural Goodridge. "We were assigned a block of forest-land and helped to map it. And they showed us how to measure the height of trees."

Paula said she remembers that they had treasure hunt type of activities where they were assigned certain nature items to find and collect—leaves, lichens and other items that it did not hurt to remove. She went fishing, she said, and her family came to visit on a weekend. And she had to give a report about the camp when she got back home.

Paula is now married to a farmer who won the Lincoln county SWCD conservation farmer award a few years ago. She has taught elementary school in Canby ever since she graduated from college 17 years ago and now teaches first grade. The Sylties have a seven-year-old son Michael and 14-month-old daughter Lindsey.

"I grew up on the farm and I think I carried the conservation project in 4-H for most of my nine years in the Kratka 4-H club," Paula said. "I know I made quite a few scrapbooks! But I think the camp helped me to appreciate nature and enjoy the outdoors more and I think it increased my interest in conservation."

Michael Hanson Learned To See What Was Around Him

"We played in the woods for years as kids and took our surroundings for granted," recalls Michael Hanson, who farms east of Goodridge. "At conservation camp we learned to look at and recognize what was around us. I remember helping to take a deer census by counting droppings and learning how to identify different trees and plants."

He also remembers the unfamiliar suddenly becoming familiar as the bus neared the camp. "It was just a few miles down the road from my uncle Ralph and aunt Janice Ecklund's farm," he said. "I didn't know they lived that close to the camp."

Mike remembers staying in a barracks type building with a lot of other boys, that the meals were really good, that the mosquitoes were really bad and that the boys had quite a bit of freedom and responsibility.

"They let us take the canoes and paddle to kind of an island where we stayed overnight," he said. "We had head nets that were supposed to keep the mosquitoes away but we spent most of the night trying to catch the ones that got inside. I don't think anyone slept very much that night."

He says he remembers touring some wild rice paddies which were just being created in the area and that he was especially interested in how that was being done. He had carried the conservation project for a number of years as a member of the Good Hope 4-H club.

Schwaderer Thanks For Sponsorship of Campers

When he visited the SWCD board Monday, Schwaderer stated his "deepest gratitude" for its continuing commitment to the conservation leadership school. "With your concern and support," he said, "we can continue to have a positive influence on environmental quality through these young people."

Warroad Care Center given $1,250 grant

Warroad Care Center has been awarded an Older Americans Act grant of $1,250 through the Area Agency on Aging of the Northwest Regional Development commission.

The grant is part of Project CARE (Community Action to Reach the Elderly) which was launched on a national level in May of 1991. The project is intended to organize resources for home and community-based care for older persons at risk of losing their self-sufficiency.

With its grant the Warroad Care Center will develop a coalition of community members to better meet the needs of the elderly, to identify care-giver concerns, assess current services and future options for meeting needs, to review the regulations concerning the proposed services, implementing a strategy to meet at least one need and reviewing funding resources for making the service feasible.

The first step is to identify those who are caring for elderly friends or relatives and talk to them about their needs, according to Mary Cullen, social services director at the Warroad Care Center and Project CARE Warroad consultant.

The coalition being formed has members representing various segments concerned with elder care issues in the Warroad area. It is now seeking representatives from businesses, churches and civic organizations as the aging population affects all segments of the community.

Persons with questions or concerns may contact Mary E. Cullen at the Warroad Care Center, phone 386-1235.

Poinsettia crop project begins late in August

For Karen Forsgren-Biever of Thief River Falls and other students in the commercial floriculture crops class at the University of Minnesota—Crookston, the Christmas season began three months ago. That was when they began working with the poinsettia crop at the beginning of the fall quarter.

Rooted cuttings from a specialized propagator arrive each August or early September and are potted by the students. The plants need to be shaded and watered with a fine mist frequently until well-rooted.

The second phase in production starts in early October when the well-rooted plants have to be coaxed into bloom. Students work in teams of two to cover the plants at 4 p.m. and uncover them at 8 a.m. every day, including weekends.

Poinsettias will form colored bracts only if the length of light and darkness (simulating day and night) is just right, according to Roger Wagner, associate professor of horticulture in the agriculture division and class instructor. By mid-December the poinsettias are ready for sale.

"The poinsettia really doesn't have a bloom like a lily," Forsgren-Biever said. "Instead, the colorful red or white petals are modified leaves known as bracts. The real blooms are those small yellowish clusters in the center."

Wagner said that this year's superior crop was due not only to a change to a soilless mix, but mainly to the concern shown for the plants by the students.

Commercial floriculture crops class is the winter component of the quarterly production sequence for horticulture students. UMC's horticulture program acquaints students with producing plants for a specific date, a very necessary skill for employment in a greenhouse or garden center operation. Timing is very important.

As class members think about timing, they realize that it is time to move on to the Easter season. While the poinsettia plants are still in the hoop house, they begin the process of forcing Easter lilies.

Although Wagner is the instructor, the students do all of the actual work with the plants. He tells the students what has to be done and explains how to do it, and he often lets problems develop to see how the students handle them. Wagner gets to know each student as an individual and can readily recommend graduates of his program to future employers.

Persons who have an interest in UMC's horticulture program are invited to contact the horticulture department at 281-6510, extension 313.

Christmas Baking

Making Christmas cookies and frosting seems to be an annual event for many children. A simple sugar cookie works well. One example is this recipe.

Sugar Cookies
2 cups flour
1 1/2 tsp. baking powder
6 tbs. margarine
1/3 cup shortening
3/4 cup sugar
1 egg
1 tbs. milk
1 tsp. vanilla

Cream margarine, sugar, shortening and egg until fluffy. Add vanilla and milk. Mix dry ingredients together and add. Chill for 3 hours. Roll out and cut with cookie cutters. Bake at 375 degrees for 8 minutes.

Make a frosting of powdered sugar, milk and food coloring and decorate the cooled cookies with frosting, sprinkles, raisins, candy or whatever other goodies seem appropriate.

SCAVENGER HUNT

For next week's Activities feature, you will need Christmas wrappings, cards, boxes and ribbons.

BOOK OF THE WEEK

At the time nears to Christmas, it's fun to read gentle stories of wonderment about the holidays. Two such stories are available at the Thief River public library.

Pierce, Anna Marie. So Many Gifts. Pierce, a Crookston native, has written a beautiful book about the magic of child's Christmas.

Briscne, Jill. The Innkeeper's Daughter. The innkeeper at Bethlehem is mentioned in a number of stories, but how did his daughter view the first Christmas many years ago?

VIDEO VARIETY

The Thief River Falls public library has a number of classics on video for check-out including these two children's Christmas videos:

Mickey's Christmas Carol. Based on the Dickens' classic, this animated video has Mickey and his cartoon friends taking on the roles of Bob Crachit, Scrooge, Marley and the others.

The Littlest Angel. Based on the Tazewell classic, this film features a young Johnnie Whittaker in the main role of a little angel whose unselfish gift becomes the shining star that lights the shepherds' and wise men's way to Bethlehem.

PARENTING TIPS

After the Holidays, Then What?

The 1992 holiday season will soon be over. After the holidays, it is sometimes hard to get back into a regular routine. Some people (parents as well as children) experience a real letdown or depression. The house looks so bare when all the decorations are put away. All the special events are over. The time has come to make a transition back into "normal routines." The good news is that it can be done smoothly without feelings of depression. Here are some suggestions to help you:

- Do something to spark up your house. Buy a new centerpiece, or have your children make some snowpeople and snowflake decorations or simply rearrange the furniture.
- Plan some activities to look forward to in the next couple of weeks. Remember that the planning and anticipation can be half of the fun of the event.
- Don't let the thought of a long, cold winter get you down. Plan to make the most of winter in northern Minnesota.
- Check out the Early Childhood Family Education program winter events. The newsletter with details of January and February events will be in the mail next week. Call 681-8670 for more information.

(Contributed by the Early Childhood Family Education department of School District 564.)

SOMETHING TO TALK ABOUT

Talk about the holidays and what you did. See if your child can retell three events in the order that they happened. Ask which one happened first, next and last.

Eye surgeries coming

Clinic manager and optical technician Jack Moore explains a computer which aids eye surgery. The computer maps the eye's shape and depth. Moore operates the computer for

Dr. Richard Lindstrom, who performs the surgery. Lindstom is forming a satellite clinic in Thief River Falls where he will perform surgeries one day each month.

The Chamber of Commerce recently honored Dr. Richard Lindstrom. Beginning in February Lindstrom will visit Thief River Falls once each month to perform eye surgeries ranging from refcactive surgary to cornae transplants. He works through the Northwest Eye Clinic.

Formerly chief executive officer at Arctic Enterprises, Swenson's poor eyesight made him give up snowmobiling until last year.

Swenson said he did not need glasses until he was 45 years old then his vision gradually deteriorated.

The day after his first cornea/lens operation, Swenson went back to have the patch removed from his eyes. "He (the doctor) took the patch off and my wife was there right at the time. She was wearing a red sweater. I'll never forget. I said 'My gosh that's red.' I had forgotten what color was. It was just absolutely amazing.

"My only complaint is this — I like to play golf. When I'd go out and play golf somebody would have to see where I hit the ball and when I would putt I'd never look up because I couldn't see anything anyway. But now that I can see the ball, I lift my head up too fast. You're not supposed to do that."

Dr. Richard Lindstrom performed all of Swenson's operations. At the time of Swenson's first eye surgery Lindstrom worked at the University of Minnesota. Currently Lindstrom is a surgeon at the Phillips Eye Institute stationed in Minneapolis. Lindstrom recently formed a satellite 'sub-clinic' in Thief River Falls and will be able to perform the same operations in Thief River Falls as he did in the Cities.

According to Dr. Robert Dicken, an ophthalmologist at Northwest Eye Clinic, Swenson's influence and Dicken's familiarity with Lindstrom (Dicken trained under him at the U of M) helped Lindstrom decide to open a Thief River Falls practice.

Starting in February Lindstrom will come to town once a month. He will bring along equipment including a computer which scans the eye and makes a topographic map.

Lindstrom will perform procedures including cornea and lens implant surgeries.

Lindstrom has co-edited two books on eye surgery and published over 150 journal articles and 30 book chapters. He also serves on numerous committees and holds 18 patents in ophthalmology ranging from lens implant technology to surgical instruments.

One of Lindstrom's specialties is radial keratotomy or refractive surgery. According to a patient's guide authored by Lindstrom, in experienced hands, with selected patients, the procedure achieves 20/40 eyesight or better 90 to 95 per cent of the time.

The procedure takes around 15 minutes and the pain lasts around 24 hours. The pain, according to Dr. Hal Freeman, who had refractive surgery on both eyes, is not unlike a toothache.

Dicken said Lindstrom plans to perform ten refractive surgeries and two complicated eye surgeries, such as corneal transplants, each visit. Lindstrom will perform complicated eye surgeries at the Falls Clinic.

Lindstrom's assistant and clinic manager Jack Moore said eventually Lindstrom might bring a surgery laser to Thief River Falls which would enable Lindstrom to perform procedures similar to refractive surgery to correct farsightedness.

Lindstrom said he might eventually expand his satellite clinics to other cities. He said eye clinics in Fairmont, Albert Lea and Alexandria have expressed interest in hosting his clinics.

Say What?!

By Karmen Lee Ortloff

I have a phobia about Christmas programs. The last time I was in a Christmas program was in the sixth grade. Since then, I haven't been back to another one. (I had a singing solo...scary thought. I still have nightmares over that little fiasco.)

This year, however, I decided to go and watch some of the kids I babysit.

When I was little, I would put off getting dressed until absolutely necessary (about the time that my mom was ready to back out of the driveway and leave for the program).

One year, when I was in the third grade, I decided to start to get ready as soon as I got home. I had a beautiful green velvet dress with an embroidered top, I had my first pair of tan nylons, and my hair was curled. (Curling my hair was quite an accomplishment because I used to always run around looking like I stuck my finger in an electrical outlet. Nowadays, a lot of people achieve the same look with a 90-ounce bottle of hair spray and comb, but mine was all natural!)

I was going to have the prettiest dress of all the girls in St. Bernard's third grade class and I walked into my basement classroom with poise, maturity and confidence...then one of the boys in my class lifted up my dress from behind! I was devastated. I ran to the corner and started to sob (with my back to the wall, just in case) and refused to go out and sing. Is it any wonder I am not particularly fond of Christmas programs?

Anyway, seeing as this year's program is the last Christmas program I am going to be able to go to for the next couple of years, I wanted to go.

I started to get ready the second I got home. I had to pick out the right outfit, I had to curl my hair (still a large task not often undertaken), and I had to pick out the right color of nylons (rarely do I wear tan nylons...It is just too painful). My mom was going with me to the program, but she wasn't as eager as I was to get there on time.

I was ready to leave at four in the afternoon (after all, it started at seven and you want to get the front pews at church); my mom didn't want to leave until six-thirty.

We left at six-thirty...my mom won this difference of opinion due to this little thing called "it's-my-car-so-we'll-leave-when-I-want-to" thing. Aren't parents unfair?

When we got to the church, I dragged my mother to the front of the church, so we could be WAY up front. The first pew was open, but we had to sit in the second pew. "We don't have to be THAT close," my mom said.

Slowly, more and more people kept coming and asking if I could slide down just a bit so they could fit in.

Before I knew it, I was at the very end of the pew and at an angle where I couldn't see a darn thing. So, I did what any self-respecting person who couldn't see would do...I whined until I switched place with enough people that I was in my original place. (I was the first one in the row, so I don't feel the least bit guilty that someone had to take over my seat at the weird angle where they couldn't see anything...after all, there were plenty of seats in the back of the church!)

The 30 minutes we had to wait were the longest 30 minutes of my life! Those 30 minutes were the longest 30 minutes of my mom's life as well. ("How much longer?" "Twenty-five minutes." "How much longer?" "Twenty-four minutes." "How much longer? "Karmen!")

At last the kindergarten class came up on stage. One of the kids I come to see led in the morning class. She was so little, and dressed in a little red velvet dress. I couldn't stand it; I started to cry, partly because I changed this girl's diapers and now she was in kindergarten, partly because it brought back memories, and partly because I had something in my eye. Whatever the reason, the tears just started to come and I couldn't stop them!

Then they started to sing that old kindergarten stand-by "Away in the Manger." I lost it. I started to sob, and I mean sob. Luckily, my mom had a ton of Kleenexes in her purse, because I used them all.

The mother of the kindergartener was sitting next to me and leaned over to say, "Geez, it's my kid and I'm not even crying..."

It only got worse from then on in. Next came the first, second and third graders. I lost any composure I might have gained as the other girl I came to see started to sing. Between songs I had to ring out my shirt, that's how bad it was.

It's amazing how much things change from the time you are in the program to the time you are in the audience. When I was in the programs, I would try my hardest not to wave at anyone during the program. Now, as soon as I saw the kids I knew, I was yelling out their names and waving like a mad woman in order to get their attention.

Yet, things are still the same. The kindergartener refused to look my direction (she knew who it was that was yelling at her) and she only let a tight smile pass her lips the entire time. (Wow, that's sure better than I was ever able to do!) The second grader wasn't on my side of the altar, so I was unable to try and distract her during the program (I can't help myself, all right), but I did catch her when she was coming off the altar. I yelled out her name (and I do mean yelled) and the sheer shock of hearing her name THAT loudly made her stop dead in her tracks. This caused a chain reaction and before long, the entire second grade class was jumbled together and out of their nice orderly line.

The second grader spotted me (not an overly challenging task considering I was the one in the second row jumping up and down) and a big smile crossed her face as she did one of those Queen Elizabeth waves and continued without any knowledge of the mess her classmates were in behind her.

I cried through the whole program. By the time the program was over, my eyes were nothing more than big red puffs on my face (unfortunately, I do not cry very eloquently). But I was determined to go down stairs, have some punch, a cookie, and tell the kids how well they did.

As soon as I spotted the second grader, I started to cry again, but I gave her a little hug and told her how good she was. Her reply? "Look, Karmen's crying!" Naturally, as she said this, the entire church basement became silent, everyone heard, and everyone turned to look at me. I could have died! I have, however, gotten over my phobias of Christmas programs.

ba Airlines. When Annette heard that Troy needed to get to Minneapolis in a hurry, she quickly issued one of her boarding passes for him.

Even when he arrived at Hennepin County Medical Center everything went smoothly, said Kathy. She said Troy really didn't know where to go when he walked into the large hospital.

Maybe it's because he's from a small town, but when he walked into a room full of people, a nurse spotted him right away and asked him if he needed assistance.

Kathy said all they know of the donor is that he was a caucasian male in his late 30's, and judging by the kidney, probably twice as big as Troy.

Kathy said if she knew the donor she would thank the family, but she also thanks everyone who agrees to be a donor and lists it on their driver's license. It meant a lot to their family. Kathy wanted to put a plug in for the Kidney Foundation, as well. She added that she has regularly donated to the Kidney Foundation and last year they started helping Troy.

During the years, many people behind the scenes have helped and the Carlsons are thankful.

Thursday night, December 10, Kathy, her husband Chuck, and their 12-year-old daughter Sunny drove to Minneapolis to be with Troy. Their two other sons, Matt, a 17-year-old senior at Lincoln high school and Todd, 24, stayed at home on their family farm doing the chores. The Carlsons raise registered Angus beef cattle and farm crops. Chuck has also been with UPS for more than 25 years. Kathy and Peggy Kezar own Victoria House, a doll shop. Needless to say, everybody in the Carlson household works. Also, all of the children have been members of 4-H and the Prowler swim team.

The operation on Friday, December 11, went smoothly, she said. They had more difficulty getting a central line in than getting the kidney in place because of all of the scarring that has occurred during the 70 operations he has had. And, they did have trouble getting the kidney in because Troy never really had any kidneys, so there was little room for the large kidney.

It can take up to two weeks for a kidney to start to work, Kathy said. Troy's new kidney started to work on the Sunday following his operation on Friday. A week later he was expected to be out of the hospital.

Troy will spend much of the next two months at the Kidney House which is located within about two blocks of Hennepin County Medical Center in Minneapolis. The home is for kidney transplant patients and their families. During those two months they will closely monitor his progress. Kathy said they may let him come home one day for Christmas.

Troy will have to take medication for the rest of his life to prevent rejection of the kidney. Troy has taken medication all of his life, so it's nothing new to him. Kathy said taking medication is preferable to being on dialysis, which really isn't much of a life, it's an existence, she said. Now, he has his life back.

Kathy said Troy is anxious to get back to school. She said he's thinking of becoming a counselor or psychologist because he thinks he can help people deal with the same sort of problems he has gone through.

In addition to school, he also worked for Amoco 24 in Thief River Falls. Kathy said the owner, Lonnie Nyflot and his wife Jan have been great. They knew about Troy's kidney problems and were willing to fill in or give him the time he needed. There aren't many people or bosses like that, willing to allow an employee so much time, she added.

Troy is also anxious to renew his friendly rivalries with his brothers. As in many families, the brothers are always challenging and competing with each other. Lately, Matt and Troy have been lifting weights. Matt is already crying foul because one of the drugs Troy has to take is steroids. Kathy said Matt is worried that while he's working hard Troy will gain muscle mass just sitting still.

Troy has also set his sights on competing in the Transplant Olympics, something he learned about from John Michael Anderson of Thief River Falls. Because of Troy's problems with his kidneys, his participation in sports has been limited. Now he's looking forward to running, swimming, lifting and other activities.

This is already a particularly happy Christmas for the Carlsons. Their wishes have come true, their dreams are ahead of them. Troy said to his mother recently that he now has everything that he has ever really wanted.

Jeremy Engelstad of Grygla-Gatzke went up between Red Lake County Central defenders Aaron Chaput (55), Jacob Melby (30) and Ryan Salberg (43) for this shot during Friday's semifinal encounter in the Northland Community College Invitational boys high school basketball tournament. The Mustangs beat the Eagles 61-57.

Prowlers lose 4-1 at Hibbing

Thief River Falls' 1992-93 high school hockey fortunes, bouncing back and forth from the win to the loss column, took another dip on the negative side Saturday when the Prowlers dropped a 4-1 decision at Hibbing.

The 3-4 Thief River Falls record reads like a stop-and-go traffic light: a 4-2 loss to Grand Forks Central, a 5-0 win over Bemidji, a 5-4 loss to Warroad, a 6-2 win over St. Paul Johnson, a 3-2 loss to Blake, a 6-2 win over East Grand Forks, a 4-1 loss to Hibbing.

The Prowlers will be idle this week before joining Rochester Mayo, Minnetonka and Henry Sibley of West St. Paul at the round-robin Rochester Invitational beginning Monday.

Saturday, Hibbing sophomore Todd Gustin had a big night in goal as the Prowlers out-shot the Bluejackets 31-23. He worked on a shut-out until Thief River Falls freshman Kaine Martell put a rebound under the goalie at 9:18 of the third period.

That made it 3-1, but Hibbing rebuilt a three-goal spread when Matt Siekkinen hit an open net with just two seconds left after Thief River Falls goalie Trevor Haugen was pulled for an extra attacker.

The Prowlers had plenty of scoring chances, but couldn't get the puck past Gustin. "I thought we played a very good hockey game, but their kid (Gustin) made some gigantic saves," said Thief River Falls coach Glenn Chodo. "We're out shooting people, but now its starting to get to the can we score type thing. Right now that's our nemesis. Frustration is starting to set in."

Only goal scored in the first two periods came from Jeff Sundvick, who came down one-on-one against a Thief River Falls defender and let fly with a slap shot from near the blue line that Haugen lost sight of. The puck caught the upper corner of the net at 7:35 of the first period.

Both goalies made a batch of top-notch saves to keep it at 1-0 before Eric Rewertz hit the corner on a long slap shot from along the boards just 1:23 into the third period.

Rewertz scored again at 6:04 when he was left alone in front of the net as the Bluejackets applied pressure in the Thief River Falls zone. He quickly turned the centering pass into a 3-0 cushion.

Gators beat Nordics

Freshman Krissi Super scored 30 points Saturday to lead Badger/Greenbush-Middle River past Marshall County Central 57-37 in a girls high school basketball game at Greenbush.

The Gators had a big edge in shooting, turning in a 24-for-39, 62 percent effort, compared to a 14-for-55, 25 percent showing by the Nordics.

Those figures produced Badger/Greenbush-Middle River quarter leads of 13-7, 27-21 and 42-29.

"I was pleased with the way we played in the first half," noted Marshall County Central coach Tom Mjelde, "but in the second half it was just like there was a lid on the basket. The ball just wouldn't go in. We did everything we had to do to win the game, except put the ball in the basket, and as the game went along, it kept getting worse."

Junior Sara Lokstad scored 19 points to lead the Nordics.

The Gators were 6-for-9 at the free throw line, were the Nordics went 9-for-12. Marshall County Central had a 29-28 rebound edge, and Badger/Greenbush-Middle River topped the turnover charts 23-20.

Results left Badger/Greenbush-Middle River 4-3 and Marshall County Central 2-4. The Gators played again Tuesday; the Nordics will be idle until Jan. 4.

"We getting better each game," pointed out Badger/Greenbush-Middle River coach Tom Neibauer. "Krissi had a good game, and we're getting good floor play out of our guards to get the ball into Krissi's hands."

Red Lake County freshman Aaron Chaput was named the tournament's most valuable player. He was joined on the all-tournament team by Joey Wilebski and Michael Steen of Kittson County North; Brody Willis, Lake of the Woods; Travis Kotrba and Eldon Quam, Goodridge; Kent Wavra and Ben Brickson, East Grand Forks Sacred Heart; Jacob Melby and Ryan Melby, Red Lake County Central; and Jeremy Engelstad, Grygla-Gatzke.

Red Lake County Central was in control from start to finish, as the Mustangs beat Kittson County North 63-54 for the title.

The Mustangs grabbed a 20-9 first quarter lead, had a 35-19 halftime cushion and maintained a 43-27 third quarter spread.

"We played real well in the first half," said Red Lake County Central coach Todd Fore. "We were getting the ball inside, getting good shots, and the ball was going in for us."

A versatile Red Lake County Central attack featured 6-2 center Aaron Chaput with 23 points, 6-0 forward Jacob Melby with 18 and 5-11 forward Ryan Melby with 13. Jacob Melby hit three 3-point shots in the first half to ignite the strong Red Lake County Central start.

Joey Wilebski and Donnie Schmiedeberg paced Kittson County North with 19 and 16 points, respectively.

Both teams had productive nights at the free throw line, where the Mustangs were 21-for-28 and the Cougars went 14-for-19. The Mustangs used six free throws by Chaput and five by Ryan Melby in the fourth quarter to hold off a Kittson County North comeback.

Goodridge 46
Grygla-Gatzke 45

Mitch Smsky hit four three-point baskets in the fourth quarter to lift Goodridge past Grygla-Gatzke 46-45 as the rivals met for third place.

The Huskies won it on a pair of Travis Kotrba free throws with 2.1 seconds left to complete a comeback from an 11-point deficit with 2 1/2 minutes left.

"We blew it," said Grygla-Gatzke coach Vern Johnson. "We gift-wrapped this one; Merry Christmas. We made some foolishing mistakes that a young team will make."

Smsky, like the rest of the Goodridge offense, was quiet most of the night. The Huskies had a 12-10 first quarter lead, but trailed 23-20 at halftime and fell behind 32-25 at the end of the third quarter before coming up with a 21-point final period, thanks in large part to Smsky, a 6-0 sophomore guard who did not have a point until he found the range down the stretch.

In addition to Smsky's 12 points, the Huskies got a 14-point, 12-rebound game from Travis Kotrba, 11 points from Jason Kotrba, and 16 rebound from Eldon Quam.

Jeremy Engelstad scored a game-high 18 points for the Eagles, while Rick Warne netted 12.

"It was a great victory," said Goodridge coach John Rahn. "The kids played their hearts out. I was glad to see Mitch come out and play like he's capable of playing, and it was nice to see Travis come through at the free throw line at the end. I still think we could have been in the championship game if we could have made our free throws against Kittson County North."

Both sides missed 10 free throws – Goodridge going 9-for-19 at the line and Grygla-Gatzke finishing 4-for-14.

Goodridge went to 2-4 with the win. Grygla-Gatzke is 2-2. Both will be idle until Jan. 5 when the Huskies host Northland champion Red Lake County Central and the Eagles visit Tri-County.

Cougars, Mustangs win NCC semifinals

Kittson County North stopped Goodridge 44-35 in a slow tempo contest and Red Lake County Central got by Grygla-Gatzke 61-57 in a faster paced affair during Friday's Northland Community College Invitational boys high school basketball tournament semifinal doubleheader.

In the afternoon consolation semifinals, Red Lake Falls handled Lake of the Woods 60-35 and East Grand Forks Sacred Heart beat Windsor Park of Canada 56-41.

Kittson Co. North 44
Goodridge.........................35

Goodridge paid the price for shooting 25 percent from the field – a 44-35 loss at the hands of Kittson County North.

"We just couldn't hit," said Goodridge coach John Rahn. "Our offense was there, but we couldn't make our shots. We stunk it up."

Kittson County North never trailed, using three 3-point shots by Michael Steen to grab a 15-4 first quarter lead. It was 21-13 at halftime and the Cougars had their biggest spread of the night at 31-18 late in the third quarter.

Goodridge did get within 36-31 with 1:54 still to play, but the winners made eight free throws down the stretch to keep the Huskies at bay.

Steen finished with 12 points and Mike Whitlock had 11 for the Cougars, while Travis Kotrba scored 13 points and Jason Kotrba had 12 for the Huskies.

Goodridge was 13-for-53 from the field and also had trouble with an 8-for-19 effort at the free throw line. Kittson County North went 14-for-32 from the field (44 percent) and 13-for-17 at the line. Goodridge had a 38-27 rebound advantage, but also had more turnovers, 14-11.

"We just didn't play well," acknowledged Rahn. "This is the first time all year our youth really showed."

Red Lake Co. Central 61
Grygla-Gatzke 57

Red Lake County Central closed out the third quarter with an 8-0 run and went on to beat Grygla-Gatzke 61-57.

The lead changed hands six times and there were five ties in the half as Red Lake County Central took a 15-12 first quarter lead and Grygla-Gatzke went into intermission with a 32-29 edge thanks to a long buzzer beating toss by Scott Rindahl.

Red Lake County Central took over for good with the third quarter-ending surge that erased a 41-38 deficit as freshman center Aaron Chaput hit back-to-back short turnaround jumpers, senior guard Jonathan Sundrud knocked down a 12-foot jumper on the run and Chaput shook himself free underneath to provide the Mustangs with a 46-41 edge to end the third quarter.

Grygla-Gatzke never recovered. Two free throws by Chaput with 38 seconds left opened up a 58-49 gap – the biggest spread of the night. Three free throws by Rod Holte (who was fouled on a three-point shot), a three-point basket by Jeremy Engelstad and two free throws by Mike Jelle brought the Eagles within striking range at 60-57, but with just six seconds left.

Sundrud sealed it with a free throw with 3.8 seconds showing.

Chaput led the winners with 22 points, while Sundrud had 14 and Ryan Melby netted 12. Engelstad, a 6-3 senior, had a game-high 23 points for the Eagles, with Rindahl and Jelle both contributing 11.

Red Lake County Central coach Todd Fore took the win, but he wasn't particularly happy with the Mustangs' penchant for mistakes, both the physical and the mental kind. "We forced things too much in the first half," he said. "I thought we should have put them away when we got the lead, but we kept making silly mistakes. The kids have got to start recognizing some things themselves. They have to learn to think on the court and play under control more."

Red Lake County Central was 22-for-48 from the field (46 percent) and 14-for-24 at the free throw line. Grygla-Gatzke went 23-for-56 from the field (41 percent) and 8-for-12 at the line. The Eagles had a 28 rebounds and 11 turnovers the Mustangs finished with 23 rebounds and 10 turnovers.

"We just didn't get the job done in the third quarter," offered Grygla-Gatzke coach Vern Johnson. "I thought we played a good first half, but we made a couple of mistakes that cost us in the third quarter. We've got to learn to put together 32 minutes of basketball. But it's only our third game. We'll be okay."

Warroad holds off Wolverines in 50-48 game

A final Goodridge/Grygla shot was off the mark Monday as the Wolverines dropped a 50-48 girls high school basketball decision to Warroad in Goodridge.

The two teams swapped fourth quarter leads until a Warroad free throw made it 50-48 with nine seconds left. A second free throw failed to drop and Brandi Stratton grabbed the rebound to give the Wolverines a chance. She went the length of the court with the dribble and put the ball up with one second left, only to see it fall away.

The loss dropped the Wolverines to 2-4, but Goodridge/Grygla coach Mike Gast was more than satisfied with his team's efforts. "We played extremely hard," he said. "This is the hardest working group I've had since I've been here. I was very proud of the way they played."

Warroad had narrow quarter leads of 11-9, 25-19 and 40-38.

Kristy Johnson scored a game-high 20 points for the Wolverines, while Andrea Pittman helped the foul-plagued Goodridge/Grygla squad with a 10-point, 10-rebound effort in two quarters of basketball. A balanced Warroad attack was led by Tammy Knudson with 12 points.

Goodridge/Grygla was 17-for-43 from the field (40 percent) and 14-for-25 at the free throw line. Warroad went 21-for-63 from the field (33 percent) and 8-for-22 at the line. The Wolverines finished with a 35-33 rebound edge.

Gift to Wildlife

A way to solve holiday gift-giving problems and to help wildlife at the same time is available from the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources (DNR). The newly revised book Woodworking for Wildlife was republished in July as a full color edition that contains 25 different nest box and nest platform designs for many wildlife species.

Area states receive federal fish/wildlife funds for programs

Secretary of the Interior Manuel Lujan announced that State fish and wildlife agencies are to share in more than $242 million in excise taxes paid by American hunters and anglers. These funds are distributed through preliminary apportionments under two Federal Aid programs administered by the Interior Department's U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Of this total, the North Central Region, which has the responsibility for the states of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Iowa and Wisconsin, will receive over $50 million. The agencies will use the money for land acquisition, habitat improvement, research, education, and other conservation programs benefiting wildlife.

Federal Aid in Wildlife Restoration Act (Pittman-Robertson Act), signed in 1937, and the Federal Aid in Sport Fish Restoration Act (Dingell-Johnson Act), signed in 1950, collectively have raised more than $2.2 billion.

Funds are distributed to the states for projects proposed by the states and approved by the Service. Federal aid funds pay for up to 75 per cent of the cost of each project while the states contribute at least 25 per cent of the cost.

Distribution of sport fish restoration funds to the states is based on the land and water area and the number of fishing license holders in each state. Wildlife restoration funds are made available based on land area and the number of hunting license holders in each state. Distribution of hunter education funds is based on the relative population.

Preliminary apportionment of Federal Aid in Wildlife restoration funds for Fiscal Year 1993 in the Central Region.

Illinois - $2,038,316, Indiana - $1,755,470, Iowa - $1,583,594, Michigan - $3,905,607, Minnesota - $2,878,868, Missouri - $2,651,822, Ohio - $2,219,044, Wisconsin - $2,975,166.

Preliminary apportionment of Federal Aid in Sport Fish Restoration funds for Fiscal Year 1993 in the Central Region.

Illinois - $3,099,003, Indiana - $2,241,095, Iowa - $1,981,581, Michigan - $5,512,271, Minnesota - $5,377,342, Missouri - $3,673,850; Ohio - $3,911,268, Wisconsin - $4,772,924.

DNR News

Hazardous Ice Conditions

Fluctuating temperatures have created hazardous ice conditions on many Minnesota lakes, according to Tim Smalley of the Department of Natural Resources (DNR).

"We're quite concerned that people are being fooled by thicker ice near shore and don't realize that the ice isn't a consistent thickness," said Smalley, DNR boat and water safety specialist. "You need a minimum of 4 inches of clear blue ice to ice fish and 5 inches for a snowmobile. We just don't have that much ice, at least not uniformly over whole lakes."

An early cold snap, followed by warmer temperatures, created ice around the edges of many state lakes, but left deep water areas open. When the lakes finally froze over, ice thicknesses were varying by several inches within just a few yards.

In Bemidji, DNR enforcement supervisor Byron Dyrland said the ice was generally unsafe, with thicknesses in the 1-to 5-inch range, with slightly thicker measurements at Red Lake.

One teenager snowmobiler drowned and one was injured in Anoka County when the snowmobile they were riding crashed through ice that witnesses said had just recently formed. There were no injuries reported in another Anoka County incident when a motor home towing a trailer loaded with four snowmobiles crashed through thin ice as it was driving onto Round Lake near Andover.

"There must be a minimum of 8 to 12 inches of ice to support an average size car and we don't know when we'll be getting those thicknesses," Smalley noted.

Escape is the main problem facing a person who falls through ice. "The surface is so slippery that it's often impossible for cold shocked victims to get enough of a grip on the ice to pull themselves out," Smalley said. The DNR recommends that people travelling on ice carry a pair of small homemade ice picks for digging into the ice to pull themselves out if they do fall through. Some winter anglers and snowmobile riders have started wearing life jackets under their winter clothing, according to Smalley. Besides offering flotation, the newer vest-style life preservers also help hold in heat and ward off hypothermia, a life threatening lowering of the body's inner temperature.

The DNR offers an ice safety pamphlet available at many bait shops or directly from the DNR. The brochure explains how to avoid an icy dunking and what to do if you or a companion does break through.

Holiday gas prices should be dropping

Travelers in Minnesota during the holiday season will find gasoline prices on the downward trend, according to AAA Minnesota.

"The retail market has been weak over the past few weeks," spokesman Ron S egmund said. "All regions across the country are down, due to crude oil prices being lower per barrel and a very slow demand."

The average price for self-serve unleaded gasoline is $1.133, slightly less than a year ago when it was $1.139 but two cents less than during the Labor Day weekend at the end of this summer.

The average price for self-serve regular unleaded gas is $1.123 in the metropolitan area, $1.152 in central Minnesota, $1.178 in northern Minnesota and $1.116 in southern Minnesota.

Of the 118 Minnesota service stations surveyed, 77 per cent plan on being open Christmas Day.

Wayne Johnson of rural Newfolden recently was named first place winner among 80 entrants from 15 to 18 years of age in the senior judging contest at the American Rabbit Breeders convention recently in Columbus, OH. In addition, he earned a district first place award and a national fourth place award among 153 candidates for management. He is the son of Mike and Linda Johnson and a sophomore at Marshall County Central high school in Newfolden.

Plans approved to make UMC four-year school

University of Minnesota Board of Regents has voted unanimously to approve plans for a four-year institution at the university's Crookston campus.

University of Minnesota President Nils Hasselmo, Senior Vice President Ettore Infante, and UMC Chancellor Donald Sargeant presented the plan to the regents.

Chairman of the Board Elton Kuderer said, "I am pleased that the Board of Regents supported the Crookston proposal. The concept of the polytech institute is something that higher education sorely needs, and I can't think of a better place than Crookston to implement this form of higher education."

The plan provides for baccalaureate degrees in four areas: (1) The food and fiber industry, (2) small business and entrepreneurship, (3) selected service industries and (4) technical and applied technology. UMC's vision is to be a career-oriented polytechnic institution.

In a polytechnic institution, curriculum focuses on applied theory and specialized skills, participative learning, extensive technology use, employer influence of curriculum, student demonstrated learner-skill outcome, and applied general education supporting the technical curriculum, Chancellor Sargeant said.

These programs build on UMC's two-year technical degrees creating technologist four-year degrees.

"The teaching-learning process focuses on meeting student needs and expectations and preparing graduates for employment," said Rita Meyer, vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Several features will make UMC's programs unique in the region. Courses and programs will be outcome driven. Collaborative educational relationships with other higher educational institutions and business and industry and field experiences are included in every program.

The plan keeps the school's focus on technical education while main-

Newfolden youth national champ

Wayne Johnson, son of Mike and Linda Johnson of rural Newfolden and a sophomore at Marshall County Central high school, recently won the senior judging contest at the American Rabbit Breeders convention in Columbus, OH.

Johnson won the event among 80 contestants in the division for entrants 15 to 18 years of age.

A member of the New Solum 4-H club and active in the 4-H club rabbit program and local rabbit club events, Wayne also received plaques for first place in the district in rabbit management and fourth place in the nation from a field of 153 candidates in the management area.

Plans approved to make UMC 4-year school

taining an open-enrollment policy where any high school graduate can enroll.

Computer technology across the curriculum strengthens the learning process. The plan is for every student to use a computer and every course incorporating a computer component.

External evaluation also will be a feature of every program.

University of Minnesota President Nils Hasselmo said in his report to the regents, "The Board's approval of 12 new polytechnic, career-oriented, baccalaureate degree programs at the University of Minnesota, Crookston marks more than an important turning point in Crookston's mission. Most importantly, it's a key step toward a new kind of educational opportunity for students in Minnesota. That's an exciting development, given a general climate that has not allowed much room lately for creative new opportunities."

The change at UMC responds to recent studies of higher education. A Report of the Commission on Post-Secondary Education published in January, 1992, states, "Post-secondary Education must focus on the needs of its customers, including students, employers and society as a whole. This is a revolutionary concept, because it implies that those who best know what is needed are not the providers, but the users of the products and services."

Chancellor Sargeant said, "This is a significant point in the history of the University of Minnesota campus in Crookston. This brings the resources to the region to provide higher level baccalaureate programs which are very important to the economy of the region. We'll be able to do and serve even better than what we have in the past. The total university system will be more responsive to the people in this area of the state."

While the University's Board of Regents approval gave the go-ahead to UMC planning for four-year degrees, UMC will now present its plan for review to the Minnesota Higher Education Coordinating Board (MHECB). The MHECB will review the plan in early 1993. Upper-level courses are scheduled to be offered starting in the fall 1993.

Newfolden youth national champ in rabbit judging rabbits of various breeds in the same judging order that three certified American Rabbit Breeders association judges have placed previous to the contest.

After the first round of judging was completed, the top 12 boys and top 12 girls were placed in competition in a second round and the top judge was determined by the highest composite score.

The management competition consisted of a written entry with two additional pages of illustration showing the rabbitry, housing and animals that the entrant owns. Minnesota is in District 3 which includes the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Iowa, North Dakota and South Dakota.

Johnson also showed three breeds of rabbits at the convention show, all of which placed well in the judging order.

The convention attracted more than 3,000 exhibitors and over 19,000 entries and took place November 1-5. Wayne received his awards at the youth banquet held November 4. The Columbus convention broke all previous records for number of participants in the various youth contests and in the number of rabbit entries by young competitors.

Wayne has been raising rabbits since 1988 and currently raises Champagne D'Argents, Florida Whites, New Zealands and Mini Lops. He participates in the Pennington county fair and many state events including showing his rabbits, entering judging contests and taking part in knowledge bowls and showmanship contests.

A consistent winner with his rabbits at the shows, he has a special appreciation for his awards because he wins with stock that he has raised himself.

Whole Wheat BIBLE STUDY

What was Paul's message?

After you read through this Bible study, go back and look up the Scriptures and highlight them in your Bible.

The message Paul gave would be the same message others gave about the saving of souls. His words would have started out the same as John the Baptist's, Jesus Christ's or the apostles'. "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand" (Matt. 3:2; 4:17; 10:7)—right now! He was saying, if Jesus Christ has given you ears to hear the message, and eyes to see the truth, you should repent this instant (Matt. 13:13)! You must "turn around" or live another way. That's what repent means (Matt. 13:15). He was explaining that when you keep Jesus Christ's commands, He will heal your eyes and open your ears (2 Cor. 3:16). He will show Himself to you (John 14:21).

It is utterly amazing how many people are trying to understand the Bible without obeying it (2 Tim. 3:7)! How many times did Jesus Christ tell us to keep His words (Matt. 5:19; 7:24; Luke 8:21), do His words (Luke 10:28,37; 11:28), keep His sayings (John 12:47; 8:51; 13:15), keep His works (John 14:12; Matt. 7:21), keep His commandments (John 15:10; 1 Cor. 7:19), and walk in His commandments (1 John 2:17; 2 John 6)?

Today, people lie, steal and commit adultery. They love their friends and hate their enemies. They attend church, holding to a form of religion but not possessing the power that results from living a godly life (2 Tim. 3:1-7). They are continually learning about something but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth (2 Tim. 3:7).

This truth they are seeking is the truth about desiring to live godly in Jesus Christ (2 Tim. 3:12). It is the knowledge of how to repent, how to keep God's Ways and how to do God's Will daily on earth as it is done in heaven (Matt. 6:10). It is how to overcome and how to put to death the deeds of the flesh by living to the Spirit daily (Rom. 8:13; Gal. 5:16, 24).

Paul overcame his fleshly nature by keeping the deeds of Christ (Rev. 2:26). His message of overcoming with Jesus Christ's Spirit in us is seldom heard today. How many completed believers are there today who are zealous for good deeds or good works (Titus 2:14)?

Jesus was glorifying the Father by good works (Matt. 5:16). He also said we will do greater works than He did because we will live longer than He lived (John 14:12). We are to leave this world a better place than when we came into it. We accomplish this by living like Jesus Christ and serving others in need.

The Christmas Story

Today we continue our tradition of publishing in the editorial columns the Biblical account of the events leading up to the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem and the activity surrounding that event.

From time to time we have used translations of the Bible that are not commonly used in area churches. The following account is the way the story is told in the second chapter of the Gospel of St. Luke in "The New Testament in the Language of the People," copyrighted in 1937 by Bruce Humphries, Inc., with the copyright renewed in 1965 by Edith S. Williams:

Now in those days an edict was issued by the Emperor Augustus that a census of the whole world should be taken. This, the first census, was taken while Quirinius was governor of Syria. So everyone was going to his own town to register. And Joseph too went up from Nazareth, a town in Galilee, to the town of David in Judea called Bethlehem, because he was a descendant of the house and family of David, to register with Mary who was engaged to be married to him and who was an expectant mother. While they were there, the time came for her to give birth, and she bore her firstborn son; and she wrapped Him up and laid Him in a manger, for there was no room for them at the inn.

Now there were some shepherds in the same neighborhood, living in the open fields and keeping watch over their flock by night. Then an angel of the Lord stood by them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them, so that they were fearfully frightened. But the angel said to them:

"Stop being afraid, for now I bring you good tidings of great joy which is to be for all the people; for today, in the town of David, a Saviour for you has been born, who is to be your Messiah and Lord. And this is proof for you: You will find a baby wrapped up and lying in a manger." Then suddenly there appeared with the angel a throng of the heavenly host, praising God and saying:

"Glory to God in highest heaven!
And peace on earth to men who please him."

Then when the angel left them and returned to heaven, the shepherds said to one another,

"Let us now go over to Bethlehem and see this thing that has taken place, which the Lord has told us." So they hurried to the place and found Joseph and Mary; also the baby lying in the manger. When they saw this, they informed them of the story that had been told about this child. And all who heard it were astounded at what was told them by the shepherds, but Mary continued to treasure it all up and to ponder it in her heart. Then the shepherds went back continuing to give glory and praise to God for all that they had heard and seen, just as it had been told them.

As many times as this story is told it continues to be ever new and a reminder of the real reason for the season. Merry Christmas!

NFO President Halloran Has A Good Idea

At the recent National Farmers Organization (NFO) convention in Columbus, OH, national president Steve Halloran announced that he had written a letter to farm organization leaders with a suggestion to increase their collective influence in Washington, DC. He suggested that they all sublease their present office space and jointly pursue renting office space on a common floor in the same office building.

It's a basic suggestion but it makes a lot of sense, as Halloran explained.

"Over my years of involvement in agricultural issues and policy, I've found the Congress and the Administration have an incorrect perception that farm and ranch groups can't agree on anything," he said in his letter. "This perception is clearly unfortunate and based upon the exception, not the rule. I believe farm groups agree on the vast majority of issues. However, certain groups (often non-farm), who would rather see agricultural interests split, focus on the minority of issues on which we may have differences.

"The result is that agriculture's influence on establishing farm policy becomes weakened, while those non-farm interests become more organized and influential in determining agricultural policy."

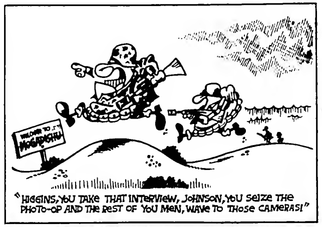
Under Halloran's proposal, each farm organization could maintain its identity within the common "ag organizations building." But the proximity of offices would naturally improve communications, he said, and build coalitions and compromise on issues more easily. They could share a common resource library, all "hear the same story" from the experts and potentially share a common reception area and receptionists.

"But the most important benefit to agriculture will be the visual impact this 'ag building' will have in Washington," Halloran wrote. "Others will quickly recognize that agriculture is, indeed, 'getting its act together.'"

He points out that getting together may be more important than it has ever been before as other interests, such as environmentalists, have become well organized, well financed and increasingly influential. It is possible that work on the 1995 farm bill may be pushed forward, perhaps into 1993, and a united effort from the standpoint of farm groups will be extremely important as that legislation is prepared.

"Our memberships, yours and ours, expects its leaders, you and me, to show the way toward unity," Halloran wrote. "I think they're right. Together, we can accomplish our missions. This straightforward integrated-office proposal can be the start of something great! Let's talk."

It will be interesting to see the results of the suggestion. In our impression it's a good one.



"HIGGINS, YOU TAKE THAT INTERVIEW, JOHNSON, YOU SEIZE THE PHOTO-OP AND THE REST OF YOU MEN, WAVE TO THOSE CAMERAS!"

* Holiday Candies and Other Goodies *

Home made candies and special treats make for easy gift giving and happy holiday snacks. Try some of these this year.

Nothing better for snacking than these.

Glazed Nuts

1 1/2 cup almonds
1/2 cup sugar
2 tablespoons butter

In heavy skillet combine nuts, sugar and butter. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, for 6 to 8 minutes until sugar is melted and golden and nuts are toasted.

Spread on buttered baking sheet and separate into clusters. Sprinkle with salt. (Recipe makes 1/2 pound.)

This candy will make you feel like a millionaire even though you are not after all of that Christmas shopping.

Millionaire's Delight

1 pound butter
1 pound brown sugar
1/4 cup vinegar
2-2 1/2 cups chopped nuts
1/2 pound chocolate bar

Melt butter and brown sugar. Bring to rolling boil and boil for 5 minutes without stirring.

Add vinegar slowly (it will sputter) and boil to crack stage on candy thermometer.

Spread nuts on ungreased cookie sheet. Pour candy mixture over nuts. Place chocolate on top of candy mixture, spreading over entire sheet as it melts.

Refrigerate until hard and break into pieces.

Try this non-chocolate brown fudge this year. Use peanuts for an old-fashioned taste; walnuts are good, too:

Panocha

1 cup white sugar
1 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup milk
1/8 teaspoon cream of tartar
2 tablespoons butter
1/2 cup nuts
1/2 teaspoon salt

Soupçon For The Holidays

Mix sugar and milk in saucepan. Add cream of tartar and boil gently to soft ball stage. Just before removing from heat, add butter and salt.

Cool and then beat until mixture thickens. Add nuts and pour into buttered pan to set.

Make quick fudge in your microwave this year but better plan on making it often.

Microwave Fudge

1 pound powdered sugar
2/3 cup cocoa
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 cup milk
2 teaspoons vanilla
1/2 cup butter or margarine
1/2 cup nuts

Mix dry ingredients in microsafe bowl. Stir in milk and vanilla and place butter or margarine on top. Microwave for 2 minutes on high.

Beat with a wooden spoon until creamy and thickened and then add nuts.

Place in greased 8x8 inch pan and chill 1 hour.

Crispix Caramel Corn

1 cup butter
2 cups light brown sugar
1/2 cup corn syrup
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 quarts (16 cups) popped corn
  (kept warm in 300 degree oven)
8 cups Crispix cereal
1 large can peanuts or 2 cups roasted almonds (omit salt if salted peanuts are used)

Melt butter in saucepan. Add brown sugar, syrup and salt and bring to a boil, stirring constantly. Boil for 5 minutes without stirring.

Remove from heat and add vanilla and soda (mixture will foam).

Place popcorn, cereal and nuts in large roaster. Pour caramel mixture over this and mix well. Bake at 250 degrees for one hour, stirring every 15 minutes.

Pour out on foil to cool and then crumble. Store in airtight containers.

I wish I could give you a "tried and true" recipe for peanut brittle but it is one thing I have never made. I might try this one this year though.

Peanut Brittle

2 cups sugar
1 cup light corn syrup
1/2 cup water
1 1/2 cups raw peanuts
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 tablespoon butter

Combine sugar, syrup and water in heavy kettle and place over medium heat. Cook until sugar is dissolved and then cover and cook 3 minutes more without stirring. Remove cover and cook to soft ball stage.

Add peanuts, stirring well, and cook to brittle stage (300 degrees).

Remove from heat and add salt, soda, vanilla and butter. Stir until very well blended and then pour on buttered cookie sheet. Break when cool.

Then again, maybe I'd rather try this easy recipe:

Microwave Peanut Brittle

1 cup sugar
1/2 light corn syrup
1 cup roasted salted peanuts
1 teaspoon butter or margarine
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 teaspoon soda

Butter cookie sheet.

In 1 1/2 quart casserole, combine sugar and corn syrup. Microwave for 4 minutes on high.

Stir in peanuts and microwave, high, for 3-5 minutes more, until light brown. Stir in butter and vanilla, blending well, and microwave for 1 to 2 minutes on high. (Peanuts should now be lightly browned.)

Add soda and stir gently until light and foamy. Pour onto prepared cookie sheet, let cool for 30 minutes, and then break into pieces.

Capitol Commentary

by LeRoy Stumpf

State Senator — District 1

A state financial forecast is what many people would call boring and complex. However, it affects each of us because the state budget is based on it. Here's the latest forecast in simple terms.

The November numbers look better than the ones that came out a few months ago. Instead of a shortfall of more than $800 million, the new prediction is $769 million.

Things are different because the economy has improved. Revenues are up a couple more percentage points than the forecasters figured last spring.

The future is still far from rosy. One reason is state spending.

For the two-year period that starts next summer, state spending is expected to climb about 15 percent while revenues are only expected to go up 9 percent.

By law, the legislature has to pass a balanced budget by the time the next session ends in May. Lawmakers will have to close that 6-point gap between income and expenses.

Eliminating this gap will not be easy, but at least it is smaller than the gap in many other states. Minnesota has recovered from the recession faster than other states, and has maintained one of the nation's largest budget reserves.

Why is state spending growing faster than revenue? One big reason is the human services budget. It includes medical assistance for nursing home residents, help for the physically disabled, and prisons and more. Skyrocketing medical costs and a growing prison population mean higher state bills.

One question mark on the financial horizon is the effect of President-elect Clinton. If his policies send more money to states or heat up the economy, the budget gap could shrink. But whatever the new President does, it will not be felt for a while.

Meanwhile, the Legislature will start working on Minnesota's budget. The final numbers will be based on the next forecast which comes out of March.

How are budget gap problems solved? Often through a combination of spending cuts, taxes, and accounting shifts. That's how recent gaps have been handled.

One of the most popular books around the Capitol these days takes a new approach to the problem. "Reinventing Government" proposes redesigning services to serve people more efficiently.

I hope the next budget battle will include more emphasis on the latter approach. Getting more for the money is something I have always believed in. It is too often lost in the bureaucracy, but I think the time has come to change that.

Property taxes are a hot topic during this cold season. One reason is the "Truth in Taxation" notices homeowners recently received. If you are wondering what it all means for you read on.

The notices have been required by the Legislature in recent years. Supporters believe the statements provide valuable information to taxpayers. Opponents say the paperwork is unnecessary and may be misleading.

How could that be misleading? The figures reflect the impact of the highest tax levy under consideration instead of what the actual tax will be.

After the notices are sent out, local governments hold hearings to finalize their levies. These levies (with a few exceptions) cannot be higher than the preliminary ones used for the truth-in-taxation information.

That information is more specific this year than it had been in the past. Instead of just describing the proposed levies, the notices are now "parcel specific." This means they include the change in taxes on each piece of property.

The truth-in-taxation system was created to help people understand their taxes. The system has grown more complex in the past 20 years as more state dollars have been used to hold down property taxes.

Efforts to simplify property taxes have not always been successful. It takes constant attention to formulas and details to create a fair and understandable system of taxation.

If you feel confused by it all, you are not alone. A tax lobbyist said last year at the Capital that he was thinking of quitting. When asked why he joked that after 20 years he thought he finally understood the property tax system.

. . . The Christmas Miracle

Writing a column about Christmas at Grandpa and Grandma's house for today's Christmas supplement makes me think of my grandpa and the yearly Christmas miracle.

Grandpa was a tough guy. He was no stranger to hard work, having been a railroad man most of his life, as well as working as a lumberjack to support his nine children during the depression.

Anyway, Grandpa was pretty tough—or so he appeared.

He was so tough and blustery and always grumbled about the Christmas fuss and bother we women went through, decorating the house, baking, cooking and cleaning. I think, had it been in his repertoire of sayings, he might have said, "Bah, humbug!"

Some time before the Big Day, we would start asking Grandpa to go downtown to get the Christmas tree. Oh, he would grumble then! Christmas trees were not necessary and "nonsense," and we didn't need to have one of those things this year. My mother would say a thing or two, I would cry, and my grandma didn't say a word. She knew.

She knew that somewhere between the "nonsense" and the Big Day, the Christmas Spirit would descend on Grandpa and there would be miracles in the house, no matter how tough Grandpa wanted us to think he was.

So it would happen that one day, often the day before Christmas, often the coldest day of the year, too, Grandpa would disappear downtown with a certain twinkle in his eye. Grandpa walked everywhere, so off he would trudge, through the snow, dressed in his warm jacket and cap with ear flaps.

Eventually Grandpa would come trudging back through the snow and he would be dragging behind him—a Christmas tree! (Grandma knew it all along.)

But Grandpa and the Christmas tree would not come into the house. Grandpa and the tree would disappear around the back of the house, into the shop. We supposed he was out there in the shop putting the tree into a holder, but, actually, he was out there performing miracles.

We didn't know it, but the problem was, Grandpa's Christmas spirit came so late every year that the good Christmas trees were gone and he had to take one that was rather bedraggled.

But he was very good at performing miracles on it. That's why he disappeared into his shop, where he had his tools, you see. Every year he would perform a miracle on some shabby little Christmas tree.

Sometimes Grandpa had to cut and trim the branches so the tree would look just right. Sometimes he would wire branches from one place to another to fill up empty spaces on the tree. Sometimes he would even have to drill holes in the trunk and fit branches in from other places.

Nevertheless, sooner or later, Grandpa and the renovated Christmas tree would emerge from the shop and, with a rustle and bustle, the tree would be brought into the house. Each year we women and children would gather around to admire it and exclaim that it was "the best tree, ever," never realizing that we were gazing at a miracle.

Once Grandpa was hit by the Christmas spirit, there was no stopping him as far as that Christmas tree was concerned. He would work for hours to make that little Christmas tree into a thing of beauty. He would be right there to help put on lights and trim it, making sure everything was done just the way he thought it should be. He was the one who made sure it was watered every day, too. He wanted his Christmas tree to be perfect and stay that way.

You know, it was perfect, too. Each and every year, I and my brother would sit peacefully and quietly together and gaze at Grandpa's glittering miracle of a Christmas tree and we just knew that particular tree was the most beautiful tree of all. The fact that my brother and I sat together peacefully and quietly was another miracle, I might add, and another story, too.

Maybe the Christmas miracle was what Grandpa did to make the Christmas tree beautiful, but I think the real Christmas miracle was the Christmas Spirit that got into Grandpa every year.

A delegation of rural Minnesota DFL lawmakers is moving quickly to affect agricultural policy under the new Clinton administration. State Representative Wally Sparby of Thief River Falls said the new administration represents a great opportunity to enact policy beneficial to family farmers and to boost their incomes.

The delegation is organizing influential rural lawmakers across the Midwest to contact the new administration. "The bigger the bandwagon, the better," said Rep. Sparby.

"Our first priority is to call upon President-elect Clinton to appoint a Secretary of Agriculture with a proven lifetime record of service to small and medium sized agricultural producers. We want a Secretary who will move away from the corporatization of agriculture in support of the family farm," said Rep. Sparby.

Specifically, the delegation is calling upon the new Secretary of Agriculture to:

- immediately raise the loan rate on all farm commodities under the USDA's jurisdiction.

REPORT

by Rep. Wallace Sparby
District 1B

- authorize a vote of Minnesota and Wisconsin milk producers to abolish the Minnesota/Wisconsin Milk Market Order and direct the USDA to establish a price system that will increase farmers' incomes.
- establish a federal Alternative Agriculture Research and Commercialization (AARC) Center in the Midwest.

"Farmers' incomes can be increased without putting strains on the federal budget," said Rep. Sparby. "The solution is not the cheap food policy of the past. Increasing farm income will revitalize our rural economy and help the nation out of the recession."

In addition to sending the recommendations to President-elect Clinton, Midwest lawmakers will make their voice heard among congressional farm leaders.

"These recommendations are just a start. Rural people can help us get our message out," said Rep. Sparby. "Please contact your U.S. Senators and Congressman and President-elect Clinton in support of our efforts. Together we can make a difference in agriculture."

Impressions . . .

Beth Johnson

This past Sunday was the fourth Sunday in Advent. For those of you who mark the Christmas Season with the lighting of Advent Candles, Sunday was the day you lit the fourth candle. Sunday was also the day which marked the beginning of the longest week of the year—especially for the children among us.

Do you adults remember when you were children waiting for Christmas to finally arrive? Do you remember the secrets at Christmastime? Do you remember the forbidden closets and the conversations in another language so that the adults could discuss your gifts without you knowing what they were?

Do you remember the feeling of terrible anticipation as you waited to finally unwrap those beautiful presents with your name on them under the tree?

I imagine that for the children in our families today, the wonder and anticipation and excitement is just about as great for them as it used to be for us adults. For those of us who have passed our childhood, Christmas is a time of trying to provide just the perfect gift for the people on our lists. Sometimes we try too hard to provide the perfect gift. Sometimes the excitement of gift giving is lost to those of us who get bogged down in the procuring of gifts.

So for those of you like me who like me try too hard to find the perfect gifts, I offer to you a list of non-gifts which may be even more perfect than yet another necktie:

For the person who has everything, and yes, there are those who simply do not need any more gifts, why not make a donation to a charity in that person's name. Give this special person a card telling them to what charity you have donated a gift.

For the person who no longer can get out to the stores, why not give that special person an assortment of common, everyday, necessities—powder, toothpaste, soap, etc., etc. These gifts may not be very exciting, but for a person who can no longer maneuveur easily they will be a welcome gift.

For that person who really doesn't need much, but who maybe keeps occupied with corresponding with persons around the world, perhaps for that special person some notepaper and some stamps would be much appreciated.

For that younger person around you, who really has no idea how to make the Christmas delicacies so special in your family, how about giving the gift of instruction in the family cooking secrets?

For the new parents who have received their most precious gift of a child, perhaps your gift to them should be your time baby-sitting their precious bundle of joy so that they can have a few hours to do what ever they may like.

For many families, the best part of Christmas is simply the time spent with each other. In our family, we cherish the traditions we have established as a family. Yet, we have never been able to share Christmas with parents and aunts and uncles. This year, for the first time ever, the entire Goranson clan will be assembling together. The gifts we give each other this year will not necessarily be spectacular. But, the gift we give each other of ourselves will outlast any material present.

Give of yourself to someone this Christmas. Your life will be enriched even as you spread a bit of Christmas cheer to another.

Merry Christmas!!!

PUBLIC NOTICE

The CITY OF THIEF RIVER FALLS Water Department announces that the maximum limit for Turbidity in drinking water was exceeded during the month of November 1992.

Turbidity is caused by the presence of finely suspended particles such as clay, sand, or organic matter in water. Turbidity can be a problem if it interferes with the Chloramine used for disinfection. However, the high turbidity level did not create a health hazard because the Water Department is able to maintain effective levels of chloramine for disinfection.

The Thief River Falls Water Purification Plant is currently in the construction stage of a 6.7 million dollar expansion and remodeling project. This project will enable compliance with the water quality requirements of the 1986 Amendments to the Safe Drinking Water Act.

Please be assured that the water is safe to drink. Any citizen seeking additional information should contact Allen J. Lamm, at the Water Purification Plant, phone number 681-3809.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of Lena Molstad wish to express their appreciation for all the loving care given her at the Good Samaritan Center at Warren.

Also a special thank you to Pastor Josh Nelson for his words of comfort and to Pastor Eugene Floistad for his words of comfort and music.

Thanks to Carmen, Grace and Melodee for their music. Special thanks to Green Funeral home and to the pallbearers. Special thanks to the Silver Creek Ladies for the lunch they served and to all those who sent cards, memorials, flowers and food and for all who in any way showed concern and kindness and being there when we needed you.

A motion was made by C. Clark, seconded by H. Sjulson and carried unanimously to approve the following COLLECTIVE BARGAINING POSITION STATEMENT:

We believe that Minnesota's current bargaining law (PELRA) no longer adequately serves the interests of the citizens of Minnesota.

- Public schools exist to maintain the base of support for our republican form of government by providing equity and excellence in student educational opportunities.
- School boards were created by the Legislature to serve as responsible trustees on behalf of their communities for the care and management of the public school system.
- The Legislature created PELRA "to promote orderly and constructive relationships between all public employers and their employees. This policy is subject to the paramount right of the citizens of this state to keep inviolate the guarantees for their health, safety and welfare."
- The state tax climate and fiscal policy have led to more limited revenues for local school districts without providing corresponding authority to local school boards to manage the collective bargaining process.
- The scope and nature of public education policy continue to change toward an open consumer oriented system while our state labor policies ironically move toward protectionism and exclusiveness.
- Legislative changes in PELRA have created a climate whereby public educational opportunity is no longer an "inviolate guarantee", but rather a service at risk.

Therefore, the Thief River Falls Board of Education supports action by the Legislature to restore balance to collective bargaining so that the people of this state will continue to receive the opportunity for educational excellence and equity.

Changes to the collective bargaining law should:

- Shorten the time line and establish an earlier settlement date.
- Establish an arbitration procedure whereby districts could avoid the confrontation and conflict perpetuated by threat of a strike or a strike and its debilitating consequences.
- Serve notice that the mission of public schools is to focus energies on students and their learning.
- Prevent an arbitrator's decision from placing a school district's budget in a deficit situation.
- Allow real choice among bargaining unit members by disallowing the fair share fee.
- Require a vote by the bargaining unit on management's last offer before a strike may occur.

A motion was made by C. Clark and seconded by D. Twomey to adjust the 1992-93 Revenue Budget from $13,066,911 to $13,199,585 and the 1992-93 Expense Budget from $13,158,798 to $13,804,731. Motion carried unanimously.

Discussion was held concerning establishing a process to name the new elementary complex. The administration will present recommendations on a process to the Board at an upcoming meeting.

Discussion was also held concerning collaborative bargaining. The administration was asked to get additional information concerning the type of approach.

A motion was made by D. Kiesow and seconded by H. Hallstrom to reschedule the December 14, 1992, Regular Board Meeting from 7:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. in Conference Room A of the School District Service Center. Motion carried unanimously.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN SCHOOL LETS OUT . . . . . FOREVER ?

How much do the neighboring big city stores spend in tax money to support our schools? Nothing at all, of course. Why should they? Smart business people work for and contribute to their own communities.

"For Sale" signs in front of schools, homes and many local businesses are a real possibility if our retail trade continues to drift out of town.

Supporting local business is the first step to keeping this community strong and prosperous. It takes your dollars to build and support our schools, churches and public services....to make jobs for more people and improve property values.

Appreciation plaques for service to Pennington county were presented last week at the county courthouse to Albert Koop (left) and Blif Penning (right) who are completing their terms as county commissioners. Koop was first elected in 1978 and began serving in January of 1979. Penning was elected in 1986 after a number of years of service on the Thief River Falls city council and began serving in January of 1987. Terms of commissioners are normally four years in length but all commissioner positions were up for election this year due to redistricting. Koop's service totals 14 years and Penning's service is six years. Board chairman Skip Swenson presented the service plaques at the county employees' Christmas party.

Mn/DOT lobbies public for increased funding

by Marvin Landia
Times Editor

In what Commissioner James N. Denn of the Minnesota Department of Transportation (Mn/DOT) calls a "statewide educational campaign," the Mn/DOT is in effect lobbying the public before the start of the 1993 legislative session to drum up support for legislative funding.

The department has prepared a series of five "scenarios" which portray expectations for the state's transportation system under each of the funding potentials.

The first scenario describes the impacts of the state providing no additional funding for transportation through the end of the decade. The second describes how to maintain the current level of annual investment in the state highway system and provide for transit improvements throughout the state in the next biennium. The third maintains the same annual increase in spending through the end of the decade.

The fourth and fifth scenarios—realistically considered only as wishful thinking in light of the state's overall financial condition—describe the funding that would be needed through fiscal year 2000 to improve the state's transportation infrastructure, meet increased transportation funding needs of local units of government, maintain statewide transit improvements and greatly improve transportation's ability to support and enhance economic expansion throughout Minnesota.

In the northwestern part of the state, public relations director Mark Anderson of the Mn/DOT office in Bemidji has been meeting with news media representatives to present the department's position.

In fiscal year 1992, $1.35 billion was available to Minnesota to fund roadways and transit programs throughout the state. Principal sources of these funds are the state motor fuel tax ($462 million), federal transportation aid ($380 million) and state vehicle license fees ($356 million). Another $150 million comes from aviation, environment and special revenues, local government advances, drivers license fees, fund balance advance, investment income, state general fund, accounts receivable and miscellaneous income.

But Mn/DOT actually controls only $831 million or 62 per cent of those funds directly. Counties received $290 million and municipalities $94 million of that total. The Department of Public Safety receives $77.8 million, Department of Natural Resources $9.7 million and other departments $3.2 million. Ethanol exemption takes $9.7 million and refunds and credits another $32.7 million. Mn/DOT uses its $831 million to pay for construction and maintenance of the state highway system, along with its other transportation responsibilities.

Mn/DOT spent the largest portion of its funds—$410 million—on the annual highway construction program, addressing the reconstruction needs of approximately 140 miles of the 12,000 mile state high-

Red Lake Watershed District was recently recognized by the International Coalition for Land and Water Stewardship for its clean-up of dump sites along the rivers and tributaries in the Red Lake Watershed District. The district was instrumental in getting the Minnesota Conservation Corps (youth employment program) to clean up the sites and in the two-year program the workers have removed 600 tons of garbage. In addition to the clean-up, the watershed district is coordinating the activity with solid waste officers so people will continue to bring their solid waste to collection points the counties have set up for that purpose instead of depositing it near rivers and streams. Pictured (left to right) are Gerhard Rose, watershed district treasurer; Lowell Enerson, district administrator; Mark Robbins, Minnesota Conservation Corps coordinator; Vernon Johnson, district board president; and Russell Sender, district secretary.

Christmas Eve dinner for 331 served Thurs.

Volunteers working with the annual Christmas Eve dinner in Thief River Falls served 331 meals this year—nearly 100 more than had been expected—but everyone was fed and there was a minimum of left-over food.

The dinner is served free of charge at Lon's Restaurant with volunteer workers handling all the cooking, serving, transportation, delivery and clean-up and a number of organizations, businesses and individuals making cash donations to purchase food. It is intended for anyone who does not have a place to have Christmas Eve dinner with family or friends.

With several regular donors yet to make their contributions, it is hoped that sufficient donations will be received to cover all costs of the event.

A total of 226 people attended the dinner at Lon's, not counting the volunteers working on the event. Included in the 226 were 146 who made reservations and provided their own transportation, 48 who were picked up at their residences and transported to and from the dinner, and 32 who attended without making reservations.

Full dinners were delivered to 121 people who were unable to attend the dinner in person and six dinners were sent with people who attended to give to others. There were also 78 volunteers who were served following their duties as potato peelers, cooks, servers, table workers, clean-up and many other tasks.

John and Heather Wolbeck coordinated the delivery of meals and 112 were ready and on their way by 5:15 p.m., according to the dinner staff. Transportation was coordinated by Dale Nelson and Lester

Jaguar Sport to do cold weather testing in TR Falls

News that Jaguar Sport will conduct cold weather research in Thief River Falls was announced Tuesday at Arctco.

Beginning January 9, five specialists for Jaguar Sport will conduct tests on two specially built cars for five to eight weeks. With the assistance and encouragement of Jobs Inc. in Thief River Falls, the city of Thief River Falls, and the Minnesota Cold Weather Resource Center, Jaguar Sport has had a warm reception.

The reception has been overwhelming, said David Hudson of Jaguar Sport. Hudson explained that everyone from local businesses, Jobs Inc. and law enforcement have been helpful.

Hudson, who travelled to Thief River Falls along with Paul Jackson, another representative of Jaguar Sport, said that Jaguar has conducted cold weather testing in Canada before but decided to conduct tests in the United States this year. Testing in Thief River Falls will be a trial run. After research, it was discovered that Thief River Falls met their requirements for consistent cold weather, and that's what they need. It was also easier to get to Thief River Falls than locations in Canada. "If mother nature delivers," he said, "we'll be here longer."

The logistics of such research projects are a nightmare, Hudson said. One of the reasons they aren't testing in Canada this year is because of additional paperwork and permits required in Canada.

Don Stewart of Jobs Inc. and the city's community development director, said there is a "potential for something that can be a feather in our hat."

Stewart was referring to the creation of five new jobs in the community. The five specialists will travel from Oxford, England, and live, work and eat in Thief River

Sunday evening dinner guests at the Art and Betty Erickson home were son, Neil Erickson and Tammy Larson of St. Hilaire.

Note: My new job has been occupying so much of my time that I feel I must give up writing the Rocksbury social news. So, unless someone calls me with some important news, and nobody new has been hired yet to cover the territory, I will not be sending in any more news. It has been very interesting covering the news.

USDA seeks public help in updating its gypsy moth strategy

U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) wants the public's help in updating a management strategy to control the destructive gypsy moth.

"Gypsy moths defoliated over 1.2 million acres of federal, state and privately-owned forests and shade trees in 1992 and threaten millions of dollars worth of natural resources," says James Hanson, Forest Service field representative for the St. Paul office of State and Private Forestry.

The Forest Service and the USDA Animal and plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS) have responsibilities for controlling pest epidemics in the U.S., and are in the process of jointly producing a new Environmental Impact Statement for gypsy moth management in the U.S.

About 287 million acres of forest land, nationally, are susceptible to defoliation by the gypsy moth. The Forest Service and APHIS have teamed up to take a new look at the Gypsy moth problem and ways to manage it. Hanson says that of the Midwestern states, Michigan has been hardest hit by the gypsy moth so far. He encourages the people of this region to learn more about the pest now.

Because Asian gypsy moths were found last spring in the Pacific Northwest, the situation has become more urgent. This variety of gypsy moth can spread much faster than the European variety which infests the Northeast. Although APHIS, the Forest Service and the States of Washington and Oregon worked hard last spring to eradicate the Asian gypsy moths found there, final results are not yet in.

The new gypsy moth management program, which will take two to three years to complete, will replace or confirm the current program, which was approved in 1985. Under the current program, the federal government assists the states in managing existing infestations of gypsy moth and eradicating new ones using a strategy called "integrated pest management" or "IPM." IPM is an orderly process that helps guide field employees in making decisions about the best way to deal with pest problems.

With the European gypsy moth spreading into southern and midwestern states and the Asian gypsy moth threatening the Northwest, many more people are concerned about this pest. Since the 1985 program was approved, more has been learned about gypsy moth and ways to address it.

The first step in building the new program is offering an extensive opportunity for the public to be involved. "We are listening and do care about the problems that gypsy moths cause, and about the costs and effects of our actions to control them," Hanson says. "We need to know the public's comments and concerns so we can include them in our analysis of a national gypsy moth program. They are essential to a solid, effective management strategy."

The USDA is following the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) to involve the public early on when proposing activities that may effect the environment. If you would like further information on the project, contact John Hazel, team leader for the gypsy moth project, at the USDA Forest Service in Radnor, PA, 215-975-4150.

Say What?!

By Karmen Lee Ortloff

I have a guardian angel...and he drives a beat-up brown Chevy with a burned out tail light.

It was on Christmas Eve, on my way back from Red Lake Falls, that I realized this.

For anyone who was in this area on Christmas Eve, I don't need to tell you what the weather was like. For those of you who were out of the area, I have to tell you what the weather was like: imagine a complete white-out with temperatures dipping well below zero. As if that is not bad enough, imagine yourself out on a road with no trees and you have your brother sitting in the seat right behind you. Now you should be able to accurately imagine what the scene was like!

No one in my family wanted to stay overnight in Red Lake Falls. After all, we had all of our presents at home. Furthermore, my dog was left at home...alone...with our presents (enough motivation to get any fool, such as myself and my family, out into a blinding blizzard).

The second we got out of Red Lake Falls, we all knew that this was not the best of ideas, but of course, we thought of our dog and all those presents and so we pressed on.

My mother was driving (my brother was trying...it didn't matter to him that he was in the back seat) and at best, we were going a whopping fifteen miles an hour. My mom just tried to keep an eye on the yellow line because that is the only thing she could see under the sheet of snow. Not an encouraging thought.

I was sitting in the front seat, so I had an up front view of exactly how bad things were. I shut my eyes to pray. This served two purposes: (1) I would not die and be covered in snow, only to have my body discovered come the first warm day of spring; and (2) all my prayers would cut my time spent in purgatory by half! (Sometimes I forget I'm Catholic; all I have to do is go to confession and my slate is wiped clean. I'll bypass that whole purgatory thing...too bad I didn't realize this that night.)

I couldn't remember any prayers. They kept getting mixed up! I was saying a combination of the "Our Father," the "Hail Mary," and the "Pledge of Allegiance." I kept saying it because I figured God would know what I was trying to say and not let me die the death I described earlier. "Our Father, full of groce, indivisible..." you can see how obviously terrified I was.

"Don't you shut your eyes," my mom would tell me. "You have to keep watching the white line to make sure that I am still on the road." I don't think parents know exactly how much they ask of us children. Watch the white line? It was a complete white out...I guess my mother didn't notice.

"Wow! It's like a movie theatre back here. The window is just a white blur like the screen. Cool!" It was my brother in the back seat. I had just about forgotten about him in my quest to save my soul. Almost. You know, it is the positive reinforcement from family members during moments of crisis that make the holiday hassle so very worthwhile, don't you think?

Enter my guardian angel (you probably thought I forgot about him...by the way, it was a him. I'm not even going to get into this sexual bias, i.e., men are always guardian angels and women are always pixies or tooth fairies or the like.)

All of a sudden, out of nowhere, came this set of headlights. "He's not slowing down. What if he doesn't see us? He's going to hit us! Slam on your brakes so he can see your brake lights," it was a back seat driver...my brother. I'm sure you can relate.

Well, this is the point in my little holiday story where the beat-up brown Chevy with the burned out tail light goes flying past us (not literally, silly) and guides us through the storm all the way into Thief River Falls, safe and sound.

When we finally did get back to town, the Chevy slowed down, honked its horn, and just sort of disappeared into the night. I'm sure you have seen the movie "It's a Wonderful Life," so you know that every time a bell rings an angel gets his wings. (I refer you back to that pixie thing that I refuse to get into). All right, a horn is not a bell, but under the circumstances, I found it appropriate. So, in the immortal words of Jimmy Stewart, "That a boy, Clarence!"

Amazing story, huh? And it is all true, honest! Call him what you will: my little Rudolph with his lights so bright or the star that guided the three wise women (I left out my brother and inserted my sister, it's a retaliation to that little pixie thing that I'm not going to get into. Besides, it was my brother's idea to get home), but I still think he was my guardian angel.

Oh, by the way, when we did finally get home, my dog had started to open our gifts.

I know what you're saying, "Karmen, YOUR guardian angel drives a beat-up brown Chevy with a burned out tail light?" My reply? You didn't expect him to fly; after all, he didn't earn his wings yet!

"But still," you are saying, "a beat-up brown Chevy with a burned out tail light?" Okay, okay. You dragged it out of me. It wasn't my guardian angel, it was my brother's angel. However, if I started that earlier, I wouldn't have had anything to write about, now would I? Besides, I would hope that she (my guardian angel) would drive a Ford.

Farming changes to benefit land

There's a revolution taking place on America's farms that will deliver benefits to the land, farmers and society in general, according to Ohio farmer Bill Richards, chief of the Soil Conservation Service in Washington, D.C.

Currently, wind and water erosion claim nearly 1.5 billion tons of topsoil each year. For each bushel of corn produced in Midwest fields, almost two bushels of topsoil get washed or blown away.

But new farming technology and new government policies are changing this. Plows that used to turn over the soil, exposing it to erosion, are being parked. More crops are being planted into fields covered by a mulch of stalks and straw from the previous crop that protects against erosion.

New equipment, weed and insect controls, and farming methods are enabling farmers to produce bumper crops while leaving crop residues on the soil surface.

And society, through farm bills passed by Congress in 1985 and 1990, has given farmers powerful incentives to control soil erosion. To remain eligible for federal farm programs, farmers are required to limit erosion to acceptable levels on land classified as highly erodible.

"For the first time Congress tied participation in agricultural commodity programs to participation in soil conservation programs," Richards says.

This is commonly called conservation compliance. Farmers were required to file compliance plans with their local Soil Conservation Service offices by 1990. January 1, 1995 is the deadline for having the plans fully implemented. This gives farmers just two more seasons to fine-tune and adjust their conservation practices.

Brainpower Over Horsepower

Richards says the most popular way farmers are conserving soil today is crop residue management—leaving much of the residue from the previous year's crop on the soil surface.

"Crop residue management rewards management and brainpower rather than labor and horsepower," Richards says enthusiastically. "In most cases, the management of residue on the surface is better technology than tillage. That's not to say there still aren't places for the plow, the chisel plow, the disc harrow, or other tools that have worked so well.

"But, crop residue management is really the breakthrough of recent agricultural technology. We're making a greater change in the way we farm, in crop production technology, than has been made in the last 100 years."

ACTIVITIES

Christmas Leftovers

Sometimes after the excitement of Christmas is over and the toys are opened, some children may get irritable. A fun, interesting and usually available activity is to gather some of the leftover Christmas wrappings, cards, boxes and ribbons. You will also need some glue and whatever else would make some interesting creations.

Then it is time to sit down and be creative and make a beautiful Christmas leftover creation!

SCAVENGER HUNT

For next week's Activities feature, you will need paper and markers or crayons.

BOOK OF THE WEEK

As the new year approaches, it's a good time to snuggle down with a book with your children. And the Thief River Falls public library has a number of new and fun books for preschool children including the following:

Anholt, Catherine and Laurence. Two by Two. Inspired by a bedtime story about Noah's ark, twins Minnie and Max become pairs of crocodiles, elephants, bats and other animals as they prepare for bed.

Waddell, Martin and Helen Oxenbury. Farmer Duck. When a kind and hard-working duck nearly collapses from overwork, while taking care of a farm because the owner is too lazy to do so, the rest of the animals come to his rescue.

VIDEO VARIETY

As children await January 8 when Walt Disney's "Aladdin" comes to the movie theater, they can enjoy other Disney classics at the Thief River Falls public library, including:

Bambi. A heartwarming story of the newborn "prince of the forest" reflects the universal joy in us all as we discover the wonders of life and teh beauty of nature. Walt Disney had called Bambi his favorite picture.

PARENTING TIPS

Happy New Year

The start of a new year often finds us taking a look at our lives and asking ourselves how things are going. This should lead us to try to improve on some of our weaknesses and to feel good about our strengths.

New year resolutions can be a way of working on our weaknesses and working toward changes. Here are some you may want to try.

- ◆ I will allow myself room for growth and change because every parent makes mistakes.
- ◆ I will try to establish firm and reasonable guidelines for my children.
- ◆ I will try to show my children that they are capable by not doing for them what they are capable of doing for themselves.
- ◆ I will try to "catch them doing something righ" every day and tell them I appreciate what they are doing.
- ◆ I will provide myself with frequent outings and freedom from the responsibilities of parenting so as to "recharge my batteries."

SOMETHING TO TALK ABOUT

Talk with your child about what they have "done right." Let them know you appreciate their cooperation, pleasant attitude and help. Also let them know you love them just because they exist and not only for what they do.

MMCDC lends $1,500,000

Arlen Kangas, president of the Detroit Lakes-based Midwest Minnesota Community Development Corporation (MMCDC), has announced that the company has recently made loans totalling $1,500,000 with the help of the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA). Your Times

Allows readers to speak out on a variety of issues

by Tom Prichard
Executive Director
The Minnesota Family Council

One of the major issues of the recent presidential election was family values. Though both parties said they were the "family" party, the Republicans and George Bush in particular, were the ones who most aggressively promoted themselves as "the family values" party and continually ran "family values" up a flag pole, and along with it such notions as empowering parents through educational choice, less government intrusion in families, tax breaks for families with children and opposition to government recognition of alternative lifestyles. With President Bush going down to defeat, some think the electorate were turning thumbs down on Ward, June, Wally and Beaver. However, post-election surveys reveal a different result.

First, an ABC News exit poll found that by a margin of 68 per cent to 26 per cent, American voters said the promotion of traditional family values should be a higher priority than the promotion of tolerance for non traditional lifestyles.

Second, a more recent post-election survey poll by the Wirthlin Group, released by the Family Research Council, found that by a margin of 69 per cent to 26 per cent Americans believe the key to improving the well-being of children is greater parental involvement in children's lives, not more government services for children.

What was also interesting was that the overwhelming majority of the American public—90 percent—believe children fare best in a family headed by a married father and mother. Even four out of five single parents believe this. Only five per cent of Americans say the family structure does not matter. The next best arrangement to a married father and mother is a family headed by a widow or widower (51 per cent), by an unmarried parent (16 per cent) and by a homosexual couple (1 per cent).

As for the impact of various institutions on children, Americans regarded Hollywood and the federal government as having the most negative impact, while churches and youth organizations, like the Boy Scouts, were most friendly. Even among those who considered themselves "very liberal," the federal government and Hollywood still came in last.

Clearly from these results, Americans do not support a liberal, activist government social agenda. In essence, they support family values. If that is the case, why did George Bush, the "family values" man, lose? Because Bill Clinton successfully made the election a referendum on the economy; and on that point, Bill Clinton convinced voters he was their man. The Wirthlin poll found that 46 per cent of voters said the economy was the main issue in making up their minds about who to vote for. Next in line were domestic issues—health care, education and crime (nine per cent), "character" issues (eight per cent) and then family values (six per cent).

So, if anyone tells you the 1992 election said Americans support a liberal, activist government social agenda, tell them "it just isn't so."

Marvin Windows issues 2.7 million dollar bonus

From the [illegible] Times
[illegible]

[illegible] company's 1992 [illegible] sharing program [illegible]

[illegible] Marvin [illegible] Windows [illegible] Warroad [illegible] the company's annual [illegible] that funds were paid out [illegible] profit-sharing program [illegible] total. Marvin said the board [illegible] meant a much [illegible] than in previous [illegible].

The $2.7 million bonus [illegible] will be shared by 2,874 [illegible]. This gives the average [illegible] member a $939.46 Christmas bonus, nearly five per cent of covered payroll. Each [illegible] received $2.76 for each [illegible] of seniority and $3.29 for each $100 of covered payroll.

In appreciation, the employees presented yellow roses to Bill Marvin and the Marvin Family. Rex [illegible], a senior machinist explained that the roses were for all they have done. "Let history show that Bill Marvin stood by us when times were good. But also let history show that we stand by him when times are difficult," Rex said.

According to speakers at the meeting, the company's profits were down in 1992, but with the employees' perseverence, adaptation and cooperation, and through the company's new total quality management (TQM) programs, Marvin Windows and Doors will make larger profits in the future.

Frank Marvin, vice chairman, explained that there are on average 1.8 million housing starts each year. In 1992, however, there were 1.2 million.

Jake Marvin, CEO and president, said the company was obviously less profitable in 1992, but instead of Marvin Windows laying off a large number of employees, the company was investing in the future.

He explained that company orders started to recover from low numbers in late 1991, but for the first time in the company's 50-year history, Marvin Windows found price resistance in the market in [illegible].

Jake said the company has four [illegible]. It could raise prices again. [illegible] cut costs [illegible] gain more of the market share.

He said the company feels like it is in a box and the only alternative is the [illegible] option. Jake announced a cost-cutting goal for the company of $20 million in two years.

Marvin said senior management took a [illegible] per cent cut in compensation in 1991, that is still in place. He explained that as of December 1, salaries of all other salaried employees were frozen at Marvin Windows. Employees with hourly salaries will continue to see raises.

He also asked for employee ideas on how the company can cut costs in other areas.

"We simply aren't managing our labor sources as well as we did just eight years ago," said Jake. "Productivity is down."

He said cuts will be made without a cut in quality, without a cut in service to the Marvin customer and without laying off employees who work at the plant.

Jake reminded employees that a recent move by the carpenter's union to unionize the Warroad plant would not increase sales or profits for the company. He urged employees to reject the union's moves to organize the plant.

"We have remained profitable," said Jake Marvin. "We have remained well financed and we have no long-term debt. We are respected by our customers. We are respected by our suppliers and we are [illegible] by our competitors. We [illegible] the test of time. [illegible]."

Senior Vice President of Sales and Marketing Susan Marvin said a new five-year marketing plan will be put together in January. She said a TQM plan will be put together in the sales and marketing department.

"If we do all of these things, we should have [illegible] growth year in 1993," said Susan.

National Sales Manager Duff Marvin told the group that personnel changes in sales will not be replaced in 1993. He also said the company will cut unnecessary sales expenses.

Group Vice President and Plant Manager George Marvin told the employees that workmanship needed to improve. He announced that over 20 per cent of the products coming off the Marvin Windows and Doors assembly line must have additional work done to it.

"We need to do it right the first time," said George.

He said increased workmanship would increase the company's profitability.

"A company must be profitable to exist," said George Marvin.

Marvin Windows and Doors is northwestern Minnesota's largest employer with more than 3,000 employees.

The company was founded in 1904 as Marvin Lumber and Cedar Company. Today it is the world's largest made-to-order wood window company and one of the nation's leading window and door manufacturers.

People with AIDS are protected by law in Minnesota

"Some person's reactions to AIDS can be so irrational that when they first meet me and find out where I work, they immediately step backward and withdraw the offered handshake", says Gayle Dixon, a lawyer and Legal Program Coordinator for the Minnesota AIDS Project. "Others make assumptions about my health status or my sexual orientation. Unfortunately, this is typical of the discrimination suffered by persons who are thought to have AIDS," says Dixon.

Dixon wants the public to treat persons with AIDS the same as they would treat a co-worker with diabetes or a student with a heart defect. "If they don't, I try to dispel fear through education, and then remind them that discrimination is illegal."

Discrimination is prohibited by several different laws: the Federal Americans With Disabilities Act, the Federal Rehabilitation Act, by Minnesota human rights statutes and in Minneapolis and St. Paul, by city ordinance. These laws cover most aspects of everyday life: employment, housing, education, public accommodations and public services.

Employers cannot treat persons with AIDS, HIV positive people or people they think may have AIDS, any differently than other employees. For an employee with AIDS or any other physical limitation, most employers must make reasonable accommodations to help the person continue working. Employers should not give out any private information about an employee's health to other employees or to the public. When hiring new employees, the employer can only inquire about health if: (1) a job had been offered, and (2) health status would affect a person's ability to handle the essential functions of the job.

Persons with AIDS have the right to equal treatment in public accommodations. These laws apply to travel but also mean that a person cannot be refused medical care services. Health clinics and nursing homes sometimes try to circumvent discrimination laws by referring patients to other places rather than providing direct service. Recently, a young man won an important court case against a dental office which refused to clean his teeth, instead referring him to another clinic.

A medical insurer must cover health costs for an already insured patient and cannot try to cancel if that person develops HIV or AIDS. Employers can not put AIDS employees in a separate insurance group to reduce other medical insurance costs. Minnesota residents with AIDS can get medical insurance through the Minnesota Comprehensive Health Association, (612/456-5290). It is an alternative to going without insurance or using up all assets to qualify for Medical Assistance.

Persons with AIDS cannot be discriminated against in education. They cannot be treated differently by fire, police, public service agencies or government offices. Landlords cannot refuse rental on the basis of HIV infection.

Persons with AIDS have difficult health conditions to deal with and should not have to face other barriers built on misinformation and prejudice. If you or a friend feel you've suffered discrimination, contact the Minnesota Department of Human Rights, your local civil rights department, a lawyer, or the Minnesota AIDS Project at (612) 870-773 for help.

Results given for bird count

Even with snowy conditions, those venturing forth to count birds were treated to a nice variety of birds for the first official Fertile Christmas Bird Count which was conducted December 18. In total, 24 separate species were counted and 454 individual birds during the day. The most numerous bird seen this year was the cedar waxwing with 120 individual birds seen—the most being in the vicinity of the Fair Meadow Nursing Home in Fertile eating fruit from the trees there.

The two most unusual sightings included a belted kingfisher that was still along the open waters of the Sandhill River just west of Fertile and a merlin that was seen chasing blue jays near a feeder. An excellent close-up view of a northern shrike was enjoyed as it was eating suet at a feeder. Only two redpolls were observed. Fifty-four pine siskins were reported on count day, but quite a few more were reported by people both before and after the count day.

Four bird watchers ventured forth by car to cover the 15-mile diameter circle of the bird count area. A northern shrike sitting on a telephone wire was the first bird spotted on the overcast, snowy day. Stops at bird feeders on Maple Lake and at the Rydell National Wildlife Refuge helped bring the number of bird sightings up.

In addition to the four people that ventured into the field, there were seven feeder watchers within the count area who reported their sightings for the day. The final tally for the December 18 Fertile Christmas Bird Count is as follows: two great horned owls; five pileated woodpeckers; seven hairy woodpeckers; 10 downy woodpeckers; 28 blue jays; two common crows; five black-billed magpies; two ravens; 61 black-capped chickadees; 32 white-breasted nuthatches; 120 cedar waxwings; three northern shrikes; three starlings; 56 house sparrows; six house finches; two common redpolls; 54 pine siskins; nine American goldfinches; five dark-eyed juncos; 20 snow buntings; one belted kingfisher; one merlin; three mallards; and 17 Canada geese.

Nightline spent Christmas Eve with the battalion in Baidoa. Until the program was broadcast Julie Bakke thought her son was in Mogadishu.

Their Christmas celebrations included creating a Christmas tree out of camouflage netting and cigarette cartons and singing Christmas carols with "a free trip to Somalia" taking the place of "a partridge in a pear tree."

Julie Bakke said the temperature was 115 degrees, but that the soldiers appeared to be in good spirits.

Darren Bakke is stationed in Camp Pendleton in San Diego, CA.

This past Sunday morning at half past seven four travelers destined for Thief River Falls detrained from the Amtrak Empire Builder as it made its Grand Forks, ND, stop. The four trail weary travelers were myself and my family.

This Christmas we travelled to Chicago to be with the Goranson side of the family for Christmas. This was the first time our family was together for Christmas—ever. Three of us are ministers. Ministers traditionally end up staying at their parish during the Christmas holiday. This year was the year we finally could all be together.

We chose to travel by Amtrak to Chicago for this visit. The drive to Chicago takes the better part of two days. The trip by car isn't bad during most months of the year, but December in Minnesota can be deceiving, so rather than risk ending up in a snowdrift and missing our first Christmas together, we opted for the relative reliability of Amtrak to get us to our destination.

I have not heard of too many of you who have traveled by train. To do so from here, one has to travel to Grand Forks and get on the train going east about midnight. As luck would have it, our train was not on time—it rarely is. So we began our trip with a two hour wait in the early morning hours in the train station in Grand Forks.

Finally at about 1:30 or so in the morning our trail pulled into Grand Forks and we began our travels. The engine of the train told a story of snow drifts that it had to push through as the front of the engine was coated with snow. We had to assume that the delay was weather related. We were simply thankful to climb aboard the train and finally be on our way.

Boarding a train in the middle of the night is tricky. First of all, for me, I have changed from my contacts to my glasses and so my eyes are in their "I want to go to sleep" mode. Immediately after boarding the train one had to climb up the stairs to the upper level of the train. The stairs are narrow and they turn at least once. In the dark they are great to climb. The little night lights help, but sunlight would be better to light our way!

Arriving on the upper level of the train one immediately starts to find a seat as the train begins to fumble along. If all goes well, a family will get to sit together. Finding these empty seats would be greatly aided by sunlight, but night lights and a careful check to make sure that none is sleeping in the seat you choose assure you of your place on the train. And so we settled down for our long trip, hoping that for at least a few hours, we would sleep.

Sleeping on the train is quite interesting. I find that after not too long I begin to feel every bone in my body. It seems that no matter how I try, I just can't make that semi-reclining seat feel like my own bed. Add a few snorers—the kind you can't poke and tell to quit snoring—and mix in a crying child or two and you have the picture of what a wonderful night's sleep awaits you on the train. But, sleep we all did.

The train offers you scenery and the opportunity to view all kinds of people. This trip seemed to be peopled with families going home for Christmas. Watching the generations interrelate was sometimes quite amusing. Seeing the multitude of shopping bags filled with gaily wrapped gifts reminded all of us of the reason for our travels. Finding that even Santa was a part of the train passengers was an added delight to the children.

Our train trip ended not a moment too soon the next afternoon. As much as I don't mind traveling by train, I do begin to feel as if I am in constant motion and in need of the solid earth once again beneath my feet.

Arriving in Chicago was only half of the trip. A few days later re retraced our travels there and began our journey home. Once again the train was late—about two hours. But, this time as we traveled mostly at night we all slept—except, of course, for me, who somehow needed to know where we were all night. Santa was aboard this train, too. It seems as if he was looking for his reindeer. They had had a busy couple of days and were looking for a little rest and relaxation that only Amtrak could provide.

Next time you plan a trip, consider the train. It teaches you patience. It provides you with an opportunity to observe all kinds of people—and people are truly very funny to watch. It serves meals of not too questionable a quality. It gives families time to sit back and simply be with one another. And, last but not least, it doesn't need to avoid any air turbulence!

Area cities share in LMC dividends

Ten area cities will be among 770 in Minnesota to share in an $8.5 million dividend distribution from the League of Minnesota Cities (LMC) Insurance Trust. It is the sixth consecutive year that the organization has paid dividends.

Thief River Falls will receive $57,175 from the distribution while other area cities will receive the following: Goodridge, $2,470; Grygla, $2,270; Middle River, $1,612; Newfolden, $2,845; Oklee, $4,430; Plummer, $2,706; Red Lake Falls, $9,154; St. Hilaire, $1,933; and Viking, $791.

According to Peter Tritz, LMC insurance trust administrator, the total dividend returned to cities since the program's 1980 inception is $42 million. Tritz said that the dividend is possible because of less financial loss incurred by Minnesota cities. The trust is a self-insurance pool through which cities cooperatively insure their own property, liability and auto losses.

"We take great pride in the program's success," he added. "We hold loss prevention seminars each spring in an effort to keep city officials aware of changes in laws and to help them avoid insurance losses. This is an example of cities working together to save taxpayers' money. Everyone comes up a winner."

The dividends go to cities on the basis of a formula which considers the total losses of each member city for the years that city has participated in the program. Those cities which have been members the longest, and who have the most successful records, receive a proportionately greater share of the surplus.

Speaking Of . . .

An Appropriate Re-Run

I wrote this poem for my post Christmas column two years ago. Last year I wrote a poem on the same order to send off to the Red Lake Falls Gazette that chided them for running my poem without giving credit to me or The Times. Anyway, I read the poem over and decided it applies as much this year as it did then, so I am running it for you again.

Besides, if I run this poem instead of writing something new, maybe I will get a little extra time to clean up my house, wash the dishes, do the laundry, cook and bake, get the dog out of the garbage and the cat off the counter in time for the New Year celebration.

. . . 'Twas the Morn After Christmas

'Twas the morn after Christmas and all through the house,
Things were fit neither for man nor for mouse.
The stockings were empty and littered the floor,
And the spirit of Christmas had fled out the door.

See, Mom is attired in new slippers and gown,
The former bright orange, the latter puce brown.
She resembles an elf as she scurries about,
Cleaning and straightening, beginning to shout.

Her nerves are a chatter from cooking and shopping.
She has worked since Thanksgiving without any stopping.
Now Christmas is done and she wants things to be.
Back to normal as fast as they can be, you see.

Dad slumps in a chair, his eyes glued to TV,
There are football games playing all day, one, two, three.
He munches cold turkey and sips on a beer;
Not a bit of the ruckus near him can he hear.

He spent Christmas Eve night setting up the new toys,
Skinned knuckles, banged thumbs, uttering (censored) noise.
Christmas Day he played host to both friend and foe;
Filled with holiday spirit and joy, "Ho, ho, ho!"

The children are fighting about their new toys;
They shout and they scream, both the girls and the boys.
O'er the floors and the tables the toys are all scattered,
Some still working, but otherwise most of them shattered.

Johnny is crying, he lost his new ball;
Mary is mad, she got no "Boopsie" doll,
Bobby rides his bicycle through the front hall;
And Baby sits screaming in the midst of it all.

In the kitchen the dog is munching the trash;
The cat leaps on the counter; things fall with a crash.
Christmas leftovers linger in fridge and on tables,
No one eats them or knows what they are without labels.

Dirty dishes from yesterday fill up the sink;
Not one drop of egg nog is there left to drink;
Cookies and treats lie forgotten on trays,
Because no one remembered to put them away.

The Christmas tree, yesterday glowing and bright,
Lost all its glitter and looks like a fright.
Around it the carpet crackles and crunches,
Christmas balls and tree needles have fallen in bunches.

The floor is all littered with scraps, bows and tags;
The back entry bulges with filled garbage bags.
Don't pick it up now or put them away;
Grandpa has lost what he got yesterday.

By the weekend, however, the noise, mess and turmoil,
Will be cleaned up and done, with the house back to normal;
Just in time, don't you see, to start new preparations,
For New Year's Eve parties and Day celebrations.

Mn/DOT lobbies public for increased funding

way system, such as the highway 32 improvement project in Thief River Falls.

"At this level of expenditure," the commissioner said, "Mn/DOT is able to maintain a 105 year rebuilding cycle for the system. This means that, on average, each mile of state highway will be rebuilt every 105 years. Current engineering and design standards, however, call for highways to be rebuilt every 35 to 50 years."

Annually the state program at present provides for resurfacing and reconditioning of 460 miles of state highway in addition to the major construction of 140 miles. It also provides for repair or replacement of 90 deficient state bridges and supports approximately 17,000 private sector construction jobs.

Commissioner Denn said that if no additional funding for transportation is received through the end of the decade—the first scenario—the state highway construction program would be cut $65 million per year in the 1994-95 biennium and by the year 2000 the construction program would cease to exist. The state highway rebuilding cycle would increase to 110 years or more in the next biennium alone.

"Other impacts," he said, "include the loss of federal highway aid beginning in 1996; declining transit service; a significant loss of private sector jobs; an increase in the number of deficient bridges; and a shift in Mn/DOT priorities from roadway reconstruction to 'patch and repair' maintenance."

Since this district annually expends about $15 million on its program, it would stand to lose about $2.5 million each year of the biennium under the first scenario, Anderson said.

Under the second and third scenarios, state highway funding would have to increase $65 million per year over the next biennium or increase an average of $93 million per year through fiscal year 2000 to meet its goals of maintaining the present level of annual investment. Transit funding would have to increase $27 million per year in the next biennium or an average of $45 million per year through fiscal year 2000. (The averages are higher over the longer term because of anticipated higher transportation costs in later years.)

Under these two scenarios, the state would continue to spend approximately $400 million per year on the annual highway construction program, although the level of service delivered would decline over time and the rebuilding cycle would not be improved, Denn said.

"The state would, however, be assured of utilizing all available federal highway aid, would provide at least some transit service in every Minnesota county and would continue to address bridge deficiencies and highway safety problems at current levels," Denn said. "Funding would also be provided to improve Twin Cities transit service in accordance with the regional transit board's 'Vision for Transit' plan."

Under the fourth and fifth scenarios to actually improve the state's transportation infrastructure, state transportation aid for local units of government would have to increase an average of $200 million per year, funding for transit programs would have to increase an average of $45 to $47 million per year and funding for state highways would have to increase an average of $264 to $666 million a year.

"A sound transportation infrastructure is the key to our economic strength and social mobility," the commissioner said. "Good jobs, recreational opportunities, health care availability and educational excellence are all dependent on the quality of our transportation services.

"Mn/DOT has the responsibility to build and maintain a safe and efficient statewide transportation system. Mn/DOT is not, however, in the business of setting transportation policy. Our educational effort recognizes that it is up to the citizens of Minnesota and their elected officials to collectively decide, based on the facts, what level of transportation service and investment Minnesota should have."

Falls for the next five to eight weeks. It could also be the beginning of something bigger.

The testing site will be located in the maintenance building at the regional airport in Thief River Falls. Tests will consist of cold weather starts on engines and transmissions for the first three weeks and probably some short endurance driving tests in the community for two weeks. Temperatures needed for a successful test range between minus 20-degrees Centigrade to a minus 30-degrees Centigrade. That translates in Fahrenheit to minus 4 degrees to minus 22 degrees.

The research is necessary. Jaguar Sport will be conducting a tandem research project in Scandinavia at the same time. It routinely conducts similar research projects during the space of a year.

Tom West, Minnesota Cold Weather Resource Center director, said that International Falls and Bemidji have been very successful in attracting manufacturers to conduct cold weather testing in their communities.

The number one priority for the organization is now to attract manufacturers to other communities in the state. There's a wide open market out there, West said.

It's not always wise to allow manufacturers to congregate in one place for the purpose of conducting cold weather research. Manufacturers demand a certain amount of security and privacy when conducting tests. The Minnesota Cold Weather Resource Center was also funded by a grant obtained by the state through federal funds.

Hudson said there's a gentleman's agreement among auto manufacturers, to not intentionally attempt to find out what the competitor is doing. Most manufacturers, however, know roughly what the others are doing anyway.

The two cars brought to Thief River Falls are specially built for testing purposes. They were shipped to New York from England. From New York they were driven to Thief River Falls in two days.

The Jaguars are bound to turn a few heads. How much does a Jaguar Sport cost? If you have to ask, you can't afford one. Let's just say it isn't your average family car.

While Jaguar is looking for a cold place to work, they have found warm personalities in Thief River Falls. Hopefully, that warmth will translate into something more permanent for the economy in Thief River Falls.

Most tragedies in home fires are preventable

Each year, more than 500,000 home fires occur in the United States, resulting in nearly 6,000 deaths and 130,000 serious injuries. Virtually all of these tragedies are preventable.

You can assess your home for fire safety and set up a family emergency plan to guide you in the event of a household fire.

The following suggestions to help you fireproof your home are found in the December 1992 issue of "The Ensign" magazine.

(1) Install smoke detectors on every level of the house, and in key spots such as the kitchen, stairwells, and hallways near bedrooms. Detectors are your first line of defense against fires; most fire victims die from inhaling toxic fumes rather than from being burned.

(2) Make sure smoke alarms are in working order. Check each one every month according to the manufacturer's directions. Replace batteries in smoke alarms (and flashlights) every October when you change your clock from daylight saving time. This habit can double your family's chances of surviving if fire strikes.

(3) See that flashlights are accessible and are in working order. They can help you escape through disorienting smoke and darkness (many home fires occur at night), or you can use them to signal for help. Keep flashlights in the kitchen, basement, family room, and near beds.

(4) Make sure fire extinguishers are handy, especially in the kitchen, and teach family members how to use them.

(5) Check electrical cords and plugs to make sure they are not frayed and appear solid. When using electrical appliances, pay attention to manufacturers' directions and warnings.

(6) Keep emergency numbers near all telephones in the house. In addition, you should regularly review key fire safety precautions with your family.

(7) Map out an escape plan with members of your family, then practice it periodically. Identify two ways out of every room, and select a central place outside where all family members will meet. These family fire drills can save lives.

(8) Sleep with bedroom doors closed at night. If you did have a fire, this would help slow the spread of deadly flames, smoke, and heat. In your fire drills, practice touching the door before you open it. Teach your family that if a door feels hot, they should use an alternate exit or escape out the window. If it feels cool, they can open it a crack to check for smoke. If they determine that they have a clear path from the room, they must keep low to the ground as they exit the house to minimize smoke inhalation.

(9) Practice "stop, drop, and roll." Teach family members that if their clothes catch fire, they should never run. Instead, they should stop where they are, drop to the ground, and roll over and over to put out the flames.

(10) Teach children not to play with matches, candles, lighters, or household chemicals.

(11) Fan the air or open a window if cooking smoke or steam set your smoke detector off. Never disable your detector for any reason.

Spending a minimal amount of time assessing, teaching and practicing these basic fire safety principles could save your lives.

Fund-raising prints being offered by the Minnesota Waterfowl Association include "First River - Bluebills" and "Spring Thaw - Trumpeter Swan."

Fund-raising projects to feature waterfowl prints

Cold fronts and cold fingers to tranquil waters and peaceful paddling best describes the Minnesota Waterfowl Association's two new membership prints by the nationally acclaimed Hautman brothers.

The mood portrayed in each of the prints is unique yet unmistakable. With a simple viewing of Robert Hautman's "First River - Bluebill's" a spine tingling chill runs up and down your back. A simple gaze at James Hautman's "Spring Thaw - Trumpeter Swan" brings to mind a peaceful appreciation of one of nature's most beautiful creatures.

Robert Hautman's "First River - Bluebill's" undoubtedly conjures up many unique and unforgettable hunting scenes. It is not hard to picture yourself sitting in a blind as this small flock of feathered jets bank and change direction just at the edge of your decoys. It is not hard to see your dog shiver in anticipation as the sound of wings interrupt the quiet of a late season morning.

"Spring Thaw - Trumpeter Swan" by James Hautman tells a much different story. This painting is about a journey. Here a solitary swan stops for a rest in the middle of its spring migration north. Vivid white plumage and long sleek lines create a striking image as you sit in quiet admiration. Today the swan isn't afraid - it simply paddles away in its graceful splendor.

The Minnesota Waterfowl Association has been hard at work for over 25 years protecting, preserving and enhancing habitat that appears in both these scenes. In addition to habitat work the Minnesota Waterfowl Association has funded efforts addressing several fronts including illegal harvest, lead poisoning, drainage statutes, predation and the control of purple loosestrife.

Sponsor memberships for the Minnesota Waterfowl Association are $100 and include Robert Hautman's "First River - Bluebill's (image size is 14 x 29 inches, signed and numbered edition limited to 1,200). Contributing memberships to the Minnesota Waterfowl Association are $40 and include James Hautman's "Spring Thaw - Trumpeter Swan" (image size is 12 x 18 inches, signed and numbered edition limited to 2,200).

To order these prints and to help the Minnesota Waterfowl Association continue to champion the cause of waterfowl and their habitat on the legislative, educational, and environmental battlefront send check or money order to the Minnesota Waterfowl Association, 5701 Normandale Road, Minneapolis, MN 55424. New State Park established as heritage fishery

Minnesota's newest state park may also offer some unique fishing opportunities if a Department of Natural Resources (DNR) plan for one of the lakes in the park is successful.

The DNR recently announced a proposal to name Annie Battle Lake, located entirely within the boundaries of Glendalough State Park, as a "heritage fishery." According to DNR Commissioner Rod Sando, the goal of the heritage fishery will be to provide quality fishing for the public, as well as a demonstration and education area for fisheries management.

Glendalough was given to the Nature Conservancy by Cowles Media Co. in 1990 and deeded to the DNR in August of 1992 for use as a state park.

"In this day and age, it is very rare to receive a piece of property as relatively undisturbed as Glendalough," Sando said. "The centerpiece of this primitive, undeveloped park is Annie Battle Lake."

The 358-acre lake has nearly three miles of undeveloped shoreline, crystal clear waters, and the potential for long-term, quality fishing. "The intent of the Legislature and the DNR is to maintain the high quality of this lake," Sando said.

The first of the management initiatives will be to temporarily close the lake to fishing for about two years. "During that time," Sando said, "the fish will have a chance to thrive and DNR Fisheries personnel will be monitoring their progress. Also, management plans for the new state park will be completed."

The heritage fishery will be the only project of its kind in the state. The use of motors and technologically advanced fishing aids like depth finders will not be allowed on Annie Battle Lake. Boat access will be restricted to carry-in boat access, park rental boats, and streams that connect Annie Battle to other major lakes in the area. Special fishing regulations will also be needed to maintain a quality fishing experience, according to Sando.

The DNR plans to hold a public meeting sometime after November 1993 to discuss proposed special regulations.

Glendalough State Park legislation placed an emphasis on wildlife management and its interpretation. Both the DNR and the Glendalough State Park advisory committee agreed the heritage fishery concept is consistent with the overall more "primitive" activities being considered at Glendalough. Other activities under consideration include canoeing, bicycling, swimming, wildlife observation and camping.

The draft management plan for the park is scheduled to be available for public review during March or April of 1993.

Although Glendalough State Park is open to the public, no development work has begun and there are no sanitation facilities. Because of that, no overnight stays are permitted.

Glendalough State Park is located 20 miles east of Fergus Falls and four miles northeast of Battle Lake.

State destroys stamps

All unsold 1991 Minnesota duck stamps held by the Department of Natural Resources after Feb. 28, 1993, will be destroyed.

According to DNR License Bureau marketing specialist Stephen Seefeldt, the 1991 stamps will be shredded in accordance with DNR procedures established as part of last year's sale of out-of-date duck stamps. During that sale, old duck stamps (1977 through 1990) were made available for purchase over a six-month period, after which all remaining stamps were to be destroyed. Because the sale was a sell-out, the after-sale shredding wasn't required.

"We set policy at that time stating that all future duck stamp issues would remain available for sale for a period of one year past their valid dates," Seefeldt said. Because the 1991 stamps expired at the end of February 1992, the window of opportunity to purchase these stamps at face value from the DNR closes at the end of February 1993.

The 1991 duck stamps, as well as the current 1992 issue, are available from the DNR License Bureau for $5 each. Stamps may be purchased in any quantity by sending a check or money order along with a request to the DNR License Bureau, 500 Lafayette Road, St. Paul, MN 55155-4026.

Lincoln cheerleaders attend national event

Six Lincoln High School cheerleaders are participating in the Dynamic Cheerleading Association Nationals in Kansas City, MO, December 29 and 30.

Cheerleaders participating are Lisa Reierson, Lori Golightly, Brenda Pals, Kristen Boughton, Jami Fremstad and Dana McGeary.

The cheerleaders attended a DCA camp this summer at Concordia College. DCA chose the top four cheerleading squads from the camp for nationals.

The cheerleading squad is competing against 18 other schools in the small varsity division. Schools compete from around the United States.

The performance involves a three-minute routine with cheering, dancing, partner stunts, pyramids, jumps, crowd involvement and entertainment techniques.

Cheerleading advisor Jill Tunberg said the squad has practiced since October.

The squad arrived in Kansas City to practice on December 28. Preliminaries are December 29 and finals are December 30.

Championship trophies are presented in each category and in specialized areas including creativity, choreography, showmanship, spirit and leadership.

Mary Reierson is supervising the trip.

UMC, BSU create training program

The University of Minnesota-Crookston (UMC) and Bemidji State University (BSU) have named two officials to coordinate joint planning between the two schools as part of UMC's bid to become the state's first ever institution with a single focus on technical baccalaureate programs.

Bruce Brorson, UMC's director of continuing education, and Dr. David Kingsbury, BSU professor of industrial technology and vocational education, have been appointed by UMC Chancellor Don Sargeant and BSU President Les Duly to coordinate a collaborative agreement reached between the two schools on Wednesday December 9. The university's Board of Regents has approved a list of 12 majors for Crookston 's proposed technical baccalaureate program that emphasizes vocational training. Crookston currently has a two-year technical program.

The agreement between UMC and BSU calls for the establishment of joint faculty working groups in four areas: accounting, business administration, early childhood education and general education. These working groups will address issues such as potential course duplication, the range of course offerings, staffing and coordination. The results of their efforts will be presented to Chancellor Sargeant and President Duly, who will then send reports to Higher Education Coordinating Board.

The agreement also calls for the two schools to create a task force on joint institutional planning by January 15. Other institutions in the region may also wish to participate in the two schools' efforts to coordinate resources to better serve students.

The agreement was negotiated by Peter Hutchinson, a partner in The Public Strategies Group, whose firm helped develop the proposed redesign of UMC.

"Collaboration is essential to our long-term plan to change from a two-year technical campus to a four-year applied technology institute," said UMC Chancellor Sargeant. "The agreement with Bemidji State University is an important first step."

Added Duly, "We share a strong interest with the Crookston campus in serving the needs of northwestern Minnesota. Crookston's new mission of focusing on applied, technical programs can complement our role of providing comprehensive quality academic programs and services to Minnesota. Sharing resources and avoiding duplication of effort will only strengthen what our institutions can offer citizens.

"I greatly appreciate Peter Hutchinson's leadership in helping both institutions construct a new ability for us to bridge our respective interests."

Hutchinson said the proposed technical program and the collaboration between the two schools are good examples of what he calls the "third choice" in government services.

"Too often today, only the dismal choices of raising taxes or cutting services are considered when it comes to providing public services in times of limited financial resources," he said. "The collaboration of Crookston and Bemidji State is an example of a third option in providing higher education. Here we have two organizations pursuing bold and creative steps to improve services to citizens in northwestern Minnesota, yet neither of the proposals calls for an increase in overall state spending."

Three killed and two wounded near Bemidji

Bureau of Indian Affairs Lt. Delwyn Dudley, 42, Redlake, shot and killed two men and wounded two others before being shot and killed by a Beltrami county sheriff's department deputy early Sunday morning, December 27, at Turtle River, about 10 miles northeast of Bemidji.

Also killed were Darrell Wayne Lussier, 40, Bemidji and Gary Lloyd White, 36, Blackduck. Wounded were Dan Holloway, 38, who is from the Turtle River area, and Wayne Loch, 30, Bemidji, both reportedly shot in the stomach and in serious condition.

According to reports, Dudley was off duty when he entered the Turtle Club bar about midnight and began arguing with Lussier. He reportedly pointed a handgun at Lussier and an attempt was made by bystanders to wrestle the gun away from him. He broke free, shot a bystander in the stomach and left the bar.

Later he returned with a military type rifle, the reports said, and fired shots inside the bar. Lussier and White were later shot outside the bar and Dudley was killed when he attempted to drive away and ignored orders to stop.

An eighth grade orchestra ensemble performed Christmas music during the holiday season at Norwest Bank in Thief River Falls. Different ensembles played throughout the day.

Six from Marshall-Beltrami SWCD attend state convention

Four supervisors and two staff members from the Marshall-Beltrami Soil and Water Conservation District office in Grygla attended the 56th annual convention of the Minnesota Association of Soil and Water Conservation Districts recently in Bloomington.

Attending were supervisors Grant Satre, Gordon Foss, Oliver Howland and Lloyd Wiseth and staff members Cheryl Sistad and Kathy Zavoral.

Recognized at the convention were Carlyle and Grace Askeland of Grygla who were honored by US Agriculture magazine as the district's "Conservation Cooperators." Their son Larry, who has taken over the family farming operation, was unable to attend with them.

"The convention gives us an opportunity to find out what has worked for districts in other areas of the state and what hasn't," Satre said.

The convention featured workshops on topics such as forestry, landscaping for wildlife and volunteerism. Sistad participated in a mini-session on educational ideas from Area I.

Allen Oehlke of Grand Meadow, an eight-year supervisor with the Mower County SWCD, was elected president and said that one of his priorities would be working with supervisors.

"I feel that the quality of service supervisors provide is excellent," he said, "but there is always room for improvement. Supervisors need to become more involved and I would like to help generate this enthusiasm."

Marshall-Beltrami SWCD is one of 91 soil and water conservation districts in the state. All are local units of government responsible for working with landowners to manage soil and water resources.

Marty Johnson of Norwest Bank presents Bonnie Knapp, the Thief River Falls orchestra director, with a $325 check. The money will go to instrument repair of violas and bass. In exchange, orchestra ensembles performed for the bank's Christmas party and at their business. Knapp said more money is needed for instrument repair of old school instruments to support the large number of students joining orchestra.

EPA issues regulations on pesticide protection

U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has issued final regulations governing the protection of employees on farms, forests, nurseries and greenhouses from occupational exposures to agricultural pesticides.

The new worker protection standard covers workers in areas treated with pesticides as well as employees who handle (mix, load, apply, etc.) pesticides for use in these areas.

EPA determined that its previous regulations were inadequate to protect agricultural workers and pesticide handlers who are occupationally exposed to pesticides. Agricultural workers are described as "those who perform tasks related to the cultivation and harvesting of plants on farms or in greenhouses, nurseries or forests." Pesticide handlers are described as "those who handle agricultural pesticides (mix, load, apply, clean or repair equipment, act as flaggers, etc.)."

The revised regulations are intended to reduce the risk of pesticide poisonings and injuries among agricultural workers and pesticide handlers through what the EPA considers to be appropriate exposure reduction measures.

The regulations expand the requirements for issuing warnings about pesticide applications, use of personal protective equipment and restrictions on entry to treated areas. New requirements are added for decontamination, emergency assistance, maintaining contact with handlers of highly toxic pesticides and pesticide safety training.

Pesticide registrants are required to add appropriate labeling statements referencing these regulations and specifying application restrictions and other requirements.

Provisions of the worker protection standard are intended to (1) eliminate exposure to pesticides, (2) mitigate exposures that do occur and (3) inform employees about the hazards of pesticides.

The final rule would reduce pesticide exposure through several requirements:

- Protection during applications —Handlers are prohibited from applying a pesticide in a way that will expose workers or other persons; workers are excluded from areas while they are being treated with pesticides.
- Restricted-entry intervals (REIs)—REIs are established for all pesticides used in the production of agricultural plants, ranging from 12 to 72 hours depending on toxicity. Workers are excluded from areas under an REI, with only narrow exceptions.
- Personal protective equipment (PPE)—The regulation mandates providing and maintaining PPE for handlers and early-entry workers;
- Notification of workers—Workers must be notified about treated areas so they can avoid inadvertent exposures.

Exposure to pesticides is mitigated in the final rule through the following provisions. Providing handlers and workers an ample supply of water, soap and towels for routine washing and emergency decontamination and making transportation available to a medical care facility if an agricultural worker or handler may have been poisoned or injured by a pesticide, and providing information about the pesticide(s) to which the worker or handler may have been exposed.

The final rule provides information about pesticide hazards through the following requirements.

- Pesticide safety training—Requiring training for all workers and handlers;
- Pesticide safety poster—Requiring the posting of a pesticide safety poster;
- Access to labeling information—Requiring that pesticide handlers and early-entry workers are informed of pesticide label safety information; and
- Access to specific information—Requiring a centrally located listing of recent pesticide treatments on the establishment.

EPA is implementing the worker protection standard for pesticide users in two phases.

(1) Product-specific requirements—PPE, REIs and the requirement on some products to both orally warn and post treated areas—are enforceable when a pesticide with WPS labeling is used. No sooner than April 21, 1993.

(2) Generic WPS requirements—training, decontamination, duties related to PPE, general notification, emergency assistance, etc.—are enforceable when a pesticide with WPS labeling is used, on or after April 15, 1994.

EPA has also established the following schedule for registrants to make the required alterations to their pesticide product labels:

- No labeling with the WPS-required statements may be sold or distributed before April 21, 1993. This eight-month period allows EPA to inform users about the meaning of the revised labeling.
- No labeling without the WPS-required statements may be sold or distributed by registrants after April 21, 1994.
- No labeling without the WPS-required statements may be sold or distributed by anyone after Oct. 23, 1995.

Medical Center using new film in x-ray dep't.

Northwest Medical Center in Thief River Falls is now using a new x-ray film/screen system that improves visibility of image detail up to 40 per cent, thereby enhancing diagnostic accuracy.

According to Orvel Stocks, head of the radiology department at the medical center, the new film provides the highest quality x-ray image with very low radiation exposure to patients. Until now, the greatest increase in image resolution was approximately 12 per cent, which occurred in the mid 1980s. A 40 per cent improvement in resolution is considered unprecedented in the history of conventional x-ray imaging.

"By using this new film/screen system, we are able to provide our patients with improved health care," Stocks said. "We can provide a more accurate diagnosis with fewer repeat exams. Efficiency is increased because clarity of the images allows our radiologist, Dr. James Grindley, to diagnose illness or injury such as small lesions, fractures and early inflammatory changes with a higher degree of confidence and often in less time."

The system, called Ultra Vision, is currently being used for all general diagnostic applications including pediatric, orthopedic, gastrointestinal and chest imaging at Northwest Medical Center—one of a limited number of hospitals nationwide that have converted to the new film/screen system.

Keomany on dean's list at Concordia

Melanie Keomany, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Kading of St. Hilaire, has been named to the dean's list for the fall quarter at Concordia College in St. Paul. To be named to the list students must have a grade point average of 3.5 or higher.

Concordia College in St. Paul is a private, four-year liberal arts college of The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod and was established in 1893. It offers a variety of liberal arts majors and special programs.

BIBLE STUDY

The mystery of the true gospel

After you read through this Bible study, go back and look up the Scriptures and highlight them in your Bible.

When Jesus talked, He changed lives. When the apostles preached what Jesus Christ had taught them, lives were changed by that one true message. Thousands responded with changed lives. Wealthy people gave large amounts to the poor and became rich in good works (I Tim. 6:17-18). Zacchaeus, the tax collector, gave half of his wealth to the poor and paid back four times the amount he had extracted from people dishonestly, and then practiced righteousness (Luke 19:8). People sold their property and pooled it all together so that all might have substance (Acts 4:34-35). One thing was for sure, lives were changed. They were doers of the word (James 1:22).

Consider Dorcas, a woman who was continually abounding in good deeds, works of kindness and charity (Acts 9:36). Consider Cornelius (Acts 10:2, 4, 22). We should consider him because God considered him. Cornelius gave money to the needy people and prayed to God continually. Not only that, but he had a respect for God's commandments and walked in them by practicing righteousness as Noah did (I John 3:7).

Yes, the apostles were telling people to engage in good deeds for God in order to repent (Titus 3:8, Acts 26:20). It wasn't something they would naturally do as a result of having God's Spirit, they had to learn to do it (Titus 3:14). Jesus said they would have to strive to overcome their natures by doing good (Luke 13:24; Rom. 12:21). Yet, by perseverance they would win their souls (Luke 21:19). Their good works would have to exceed that of the Pharisees if they were to enter the kingdom of God (Matt. 5:20, 7:21, Luke 17:21). They would have to do the Will of God to enter the kingdom (Luke 16:16). The easiest way was to consider themselves as slaves to righteousness until they could eventually do it happily from their hearts (Rom. 6:13, 18-19, Eph. 6:6).

Wherever you found disciples of Jesus Christ back then, you found "do-gooders." They knew their deeds for God would assure them of being resurrected, but they also knew eternal life was a free gift that could not be earned (Rom. 2:6-7, John 5:29, Rev. 14:13; Eph. 2:8-10). They were subjecting themselves to the righteousness of God as Jesus Christ did (Rom. 10:2-3). They overcame their human natures by being zealous for good deeds, keeping Christ's deeds instead of their own self-righteous deeds (I Peter 3:10-13; Rev. 2:26). They knew faith without works is dead (James 2:17). You never saw so many people doing so much good. It was marvelous! It produced good fruits (Col. 1:10). It changed lives. Don't worry, they did all their deeds in Christ's name to be sure that it wasn't self-righteousness they were practicing (Col. 3:17). They did their deeds in secret, just as the Lord commands us to do.

Becoming an artist is hard work. It takes sweat, determination and commitment.

The Arts High School is looking for dedicated, talented 10th graders. Are you motivated? Committed to serious study in dance, literary arts, media arts, music, theater or visual arts?

The Arts High School is a tuition-free, residential program for 11th and 12th grade students from throughout Minnesota and may be the place for you. Some students have had extensive training in the arts; others are just discovering their abilities as writers, actors, sculptors, photographers, and dancers.

And you'll discover that academics are equally stressed at the school. Students are offered a comprehensive liberal arts program including world languages, social studies, science, communications and math.

For more information contact the Minnesota Center for Arts Education, (612) 591-4700 or toll free 1-800-657-3515.

On a limited basis and as space permits, students who will be 12th graders in the fall of 1993 will also be considered for enrollment.

PRAIRIE RAMBLING

by Gretchen Beito

Yesterday we went sleighing down the Red Lake River and up the Thief River, the horses' sleighbells jingling, jingling. Such a happy, pleasant sound, like no other. Ernest Thorsgard and Ken Ose each drove a horse and sleigh on their first run of the winter.

As we sped along, I felt as if I were in a wonderful Minnesota movie, the beautiful homes with their snow-laden evergreens spinning by.

We skimmed over the ice so swiftly I wondered aloud how the horses could keep their footing on the ice. The driver assured me that just the day before the horses' feet had been shod with horseshoes with little spikes. Studded horseshoes.

We paused to talk to an ice fisherman beside his fish house. He had augered a round hole through which the river water appeared a soft aquamarine color. No, he had not had much luck, he said—only a couple of small ones.

Watching the other horse, Luke, and the cutter gliding along beside us was part of the fun. Horse, cutter and driver looked like an illustration on a Christmas card, appearing to be one beautiful unit sailing over the ice. Sometimes Luke's legs worked together on the same side. I learned that is called pacing.

Our rivers are major recreational roads in the winter. Snowmobile tracks have packed down the snow from one bank to the other. However, caution is advised, I'm told, because up-river open water appeared last week.

The horses seemed to know the shortest way around the dozens of fish houses clustered by the Eighth Street Bridge, but the driver said that he was guiding them that way with the reins. Beside us the frost-covered trees in the quiet college woods softly glistened.

Now the horses knew they were going home, and they wanted to go faster and race each other. So they were reined in to travel one behind the other.

There was little chance to get cold. The sleigh came equipped with a giant bearskin robe that covered me up. While it was true that the frost nipped my nose and cheeks, they were only soft little bites.

Too soon the horses brought us to the barn, and I was surprised to see them steaming and lathered with sweat on this mild winter day. As soon as they were unhitched, the horses rolled in the snow to dry off. It is funny to see huge animals with their feet waving in the air.

On my way home I thought of the pioneers, whose Christmas memories often included sleighing. And so when I returned I read excerpts from Pioneer Tales. Ebba Sagmoen told of leaving at 6 a.m. on Christmas morning for "Julotta" at church, six miles away. The family dressed warmly and piled into the sleigh drawn by the fleetest team, and to the music of the sleigh bells they were off.

The stars and sometimes the moon kept them company on that cold, long morning ride. The children made a game of finding the brightest star, wondering if that was the one that led the Wisemen to Bethlehem.

Sleighing was not always so idyllic for pioneers. Rose Oski Arneberg tells of her mother and a neighbor women who pooled their draft horses for a trip to the city. Their husbands were away for the winter, working in the timber at Blackduck. The build-up of snow on the country road was two feet and the warm sun softened the snow, making heavy going for the poor nags. On the homeward journey they tired so much that one horse lay down and refused to budge. Only two miles from home the women were obliged to spend the night with kindly neighbors until the horses could continue.

Sleighing was fun for groups. In this year's Christmas Supplement of the Times, Milton Swanson told Karmen Ortloff of caroling by sleigh sixty years ago near Strandquist. Each of the twelve Swanson children would pick their favorite horse to make up two teams of six.

Each child would dress in layers, pull the blanket off a bed, pile in the two sleighs, and off they went, singing at the top of their lungs.

Following the hay route, they would go by their cousins' farm, hardly stopping, leaving them to hitch up their horses in a hurry. Soon their one or two teams would catch up, and on they went through the night, collecting families all along a fifty mile circle around Strandquist until 15 teams with 70 people or so joined in the singing.

One by one sleighs would leave for home, and at last only the Swansons were left.

Traveling by horse and sleigh seems almost a fantasy today. With horses being a rarity, we are fortunate to have convenient snowmobiles to again bring us out into the splendor of winter.

Who Has Freedom Of The Press?

Some, perhaps most, people in the United States believe that "freedom of the press" means that everyone has the privilege of putting whatever he or she wants in the newspaper. Not so. Freedom of the press means that the people are not restrained by government from printing and distributing materials. It was meant to prevent government from insulating itself from criticism by the people through outlawing of political materials.

Several candidates for national office last fall came under the spotlight for placing television advertising depicting the aftermath of abortion. One of these candidates attempted to run such ads on television stations in this area and found himself in the middle of a storm of protest. Eventually, the ads were accepted to be run mostly during the time when few people—and presumably only adults—would be watching.

Another such candidate was Matt Noah, a Colorado pro-life activist who ran as an independent candidate for the U.S. Senate in that state. A federal law requires television stations to run political ads offered by candidates for national office, and to run them with no editing. No such law applies to newspapers.

Garret Ray, journalism instructor at Colorado State University at Fort Collins, asked two questions of his media ethics students: "If Mr. Noah walked into your office with newspaper ads showing photos of aborted fetuses, would you run the ads? If not, why not?"

"Remember," he reports, "these are mostly journalism majors. They should understand the principles behind the First Amendment, including the value of the free exchange of information and the importance of publicly debating even the most repugnant ideas.

"In my confidential classroom poll, the students voted overwhelmingly against running the ads. Although a warning to viewers preceded each (television) ad, many students said the commercials were unsuitable viewing for children and women who had undergone abortions. Some criticized the commercials for a lack of fairness; a few argued that they were inaccurate. Some said simply that TV should not show horrid, repulsive images under any circumstances," Ray states.

"Matt Noah might say that if we find the commercials repugnant and disturbing, it is just what he intended. That's his message: Abortion is repugnant and disturbing. When more people see and understand how horrible abortion is, then more people will oppose it. If some people are offended along the way, that is an appropriate cost to pay.

"I do not agree with Noah's position on abortion," Ray continues, "but it disturbs me that fewer than a dozen of my students thought he should be able to buy space or time to argue his position. I would like to think that newspaper editors, whose freedom to speak is possible only because of the First Amendment, would be more likely to accept the ads."

We have not had to make that specific decision here at The Times and Northern Watch office, but we do make frequent decisions on what advertising we do or do not accept. We are a private business and we do have the right to use or not use material at our discretion. At the same time, we try to be responsible and fair in making those decisions. And Garrett Ray has a strong point.

"The argument over whether abortion is taking a life is not an inconsequential side issue, it goes to the heart of the national debate. Ads that describe abortion as killing a living person are offensive to many readers, ads that show aborted fetuses may be even more offensive.

"But they are arguments of consequence about a wrenching social concern. We cannot reject such ads on the same grounds that we might reject ads for hemorrhoid remedies or sexy underwear."

Using The Press To Protect The Public

The following editorial was written by Jack Authelet of Media Publications, which publishes the New England Press Association Bulletin:

Informed people do make informed decisions, just as our Founding Fathers envisioned when structuring the framework for a free press in this nation.

The latest example of public disclosure working to the good of society is found on the college campuses around the nation.

For years, colleges and universities tended to downplay the problem of violent crime. Even on campus, little was said about rape and assault when students were victimized.

Consequently, security was not top on the list for families when making placement decisions. Students did not take precautions and failed to insist on improvements. The schools literally got away with murder. In some instances, because campuses were not designed for safety at night, buildings were not secure and campus security was often inept and poorly trained.

All that has changed following the implementation of new federal disclosure laws and the efforts in some states to open campus police logs to the same scrutiny as municipal police departments.

Crimes previously held confidential have been forced into the open. Public disclosure has exposed the problem in all its ugliness. It has stripped away the false sense of security. It has brought security concerns into the trustees' meetings and elevated them to priority status.

As crime statistics ease into the public awareness, change follows. In areas where reporting on campus crime has been most vigorous, change has come faster, with greater certainty, and students can finally begin to feel safe in their new environment.

Once again, the press and its power of public disclosure has become an instrument for change.

It is relatively easy to tally the number of crimes committed. By extension, we can estimate the number of lives shattered when tragedy strikes.

There are no statistics to show how many crimes were prevented, the number of lives that were not shattered. We have to find our rewards in the certain knowledge that many will benefit, that disclosure has worked to the public good, and the role of the media was critical in bringing it about.

Quarantine!

"All persons are hereby forbidden to enter any house in this village in which diphtheria is known to be under penalty of law. The Board of Health has appointed F. H. Gambell as quarantine marshall and any communication with affected families must be conveyed by him. All persons seen entering these buildings will be promptly arrested. All persons now in quarantine will be promptly arrested if seen in any public place in the village. By order of the Board of Health Jan. 4th 1893. H. E. Ives, Chairman."

Fumigate and Disinfect

"There is no use of disguising the fact that there are several cases of diphtheria in town. Every house in town should be thoroughly fumigated and disinfected and all persons who have been exposed to the disease or who are not feeling well should take all possible precaution. All who wish a prescription for a preventative can get it by applying at the drug store."

"Dr. S. Tillier of Crookston was here last Friday and reported that there were three cases of diphtheria in town, two at Sandmoen's and J. C. Mathews. To-day Dr. A. H. Dunlop of Crookston was called here by the board of health and after careful investigation of every sick person in town reported that there were seven cases here as follows: Three children at Mrs. Sandmoen's, one child at C. E. Whaley's, one child at Andrew Hall's, one child at P. S. Stranahan's and Mrs. Thoreson. He also reported that there were several persons now sick who were very liable to contract the disease unless the greatest care is taken. The child of Mrs. Sandmoen and the child of Andrew Berg who died on Monday, undoubtedly died of the dread disease and it is altogether probable that S. M. Hall's child also had the same disease. The utmost care must be taken by all to prevent it from spreading further."

Night terrors in children upset parents

You're awakened from a deep sleep by the screams of your four-year old. You run in to comfort her from the bad dream only to discover that she appears wide awake, but "out of it." She can't be comforted. She pushes you away and continues to fight something or someone. Her screams and odd behavior continue for 10 minutes. You're certain she's afraid and upset but she won't "snap out of it." Then almost as quickly as it began, she falls back into a deep sleep. You, on the other hand, are a wreck. You have witnessed a physiological event called a night terror.

Night terrors. The name alone sends chills up one's spine. Parents who have been witness to a child during an episode can attest to the fact that night terrors can be, at the very least, unsettling.

Night terrors are less common than nightmares. Only about three per cent of children between the ages of three and seven experience these physiological episodes. In fact, says Bram Drew, M.A., a licensed psychologist with Child and Family Services at a St. Paul hospital, nightmares and night terrors are very different from each other.

During a nightmare, a child experiences vivid content—she is dreaming and can be easily awakened. Once awake, the child can tell you what frightened her. Also, dreams occur during REM (rapid eye movement) sleep, a stage when the body cannot move. When a child is having a nightmare, she is almost paralyzed, she can move very little in response to her dream.

The opposite is true of night terrors. These episodes occur during non-REM stage IV sleep, the deepest sleep stage in which no dreaming occurs but the body can move freely. A child having a night terror can not be wakened but she can move about. And although it appears that she is terrified or extremely agitated, she is not experiencing a dream. In fact, according to Drew, the event is a physiological episode in which the body makes a series of complex physical movements without any thought, feeling or content.

And, surprisingly, night terrors are amnesic events.

"This is the most astonishing thing for parents," says Drew. "During a night terror the child looks so panicked, so traumatized, that parents can't believe the child has no recall of the event and is refreshed and well rested the next morning."

A night terror episode can occur as often as several times each night in extreme cases to as infrequently as a couple times a year. "The episodes can be very sporadic," says Drew. "Children may have two in one week then nothing for several months." There is no way to tell when a child will have a night terror, adds Drew.

During a night terror a child may experience physiologic changes in her body. Often her respirations will become rapid and deep, her heart rate may increase, and she may perspire profusely. A child having a night terror may jump out of bed, scream, thrash about uncontrollably, run around, kick and punch as though someone or something is after her. The episode can last anywhere from several minutes to one-half hour and then the child will quickly return to normal sleep. "It is undoubtedly a very frightening thing for a parent to watch," says Drew.

However, because a child is not having a bad dream, or experiencing any pain, intervention from parents should be minimal because attempting to restrain a child only agitates her more and could possibly prolong the duration of the episode, says Drew.

"Usually a child having a night terror will not let her parents comfort her and will push them away or even kick and hit them. This, of course, is frustrating to parents, who are trying to help their child," he says.

Until recent years, it was believed that night terrors had psychological roots and could be traced back to trauma or significant stress in a child's life. "However, careful studies have shown that night terrors occur in the absence of any psychological cause," says Drew.

What parents can do:

- Reassure yourself that your child is not suffering, not in any pain or having a bad dream. Remember, if you can wake your child, she is not having a night terror. (opened eyes are not a sign that your child is awake).
- Don't try to restrain your child, it will only upset her more. Instead, make the room safe so that she can't trip or run into sharp objects. If necessary, put a gate at the stairs.
- Keep in mind that if your child is having a nightmare or is in discomfort, she will likely want to be held and would let you comfort her.
- Assure adequate sleep for your child. Although you may be tempted to cut out her nap or keep her up later so she "sleeps better," these methods will have the opposite effect because overly tired children do not sleep better.
- If the child having night terrors shares a bedroom with a sibling too young to understand that the episode isn't harmful or scary, arrangements should be made for one of the children to sleep somewhere else.
- No treatment is necessary for night terrors. A child usually will outgrow them by late childhood or early adolescence. However, in some extreme cases (episodes occurring every night and lasting for more than an hour) medication may be considered.

For more information about night terrors or other pediatric health issues, call Children's On-Call, a free health and information line, at 1-800-869-1320.

Project 120, page program are offered

State Representatives Wally Sparby of Thief River Falls and Jim Tunheim of Kennedy and Sen. LeRoy Stumpf of Thief River Falls are encouraging high school students to participate in Project 120 and the High School Page Program.

"Project 120 is a fantastic opportunity for the students of District 1A," Rep. Tanheim said. "I hope that any student who is interested in state government applies for these seminars."

Project 120 brings high school students to the Capitol to participate in a hands-on study of state government during the legislative session. Rep. Sparby said that, during the 1993 session, there will be 13 weekly seminars, which will run from the week of January 24 to the week of April 25. Interested students should talk to their teachers, contact the Project 120 office at (612) 224-2100 or contact Rep. Tunheim's office at (612) 296-9635 or Rep. Sparby's office at (612) 296-9918.

The legislators also remind students about the Minnesota House of Representatives High School Page Program.

"This program is an opportunity for all high school juniors of public and non-public Minnesota schools to learn about the governmental process", Rep. Tunheim said.

One student is chosen to participate from each of Minnesota's 134 Legislative districts. Students must be nominated by their schools in order to be considered for participation in the program. "Once the students arrive at the Capitol, they interact with students from across the state, House members and staff, to gain an objective viewpoint of Minnesota's two party system," Rep. Sparby said.

Students have already been selected for the 1993 Legislative Session, but students who will be juniors next year are encouraged to apply. Interested students can contact their school officials for more information or call High School Page Program Coordinator at (612) 296-7452.

PUBLIC NOTICE

The CITY OF THIEF RIVER FALLS Water Department announces that the maximum limit for Turbidity in drinking water was exceeded during the month of November 1992.

Turbidity is caused by the presence of finely suspended particles such as clay, sand, or organic matter in water. Turbidity can be a problem if it interferes with the Chloramine used for disinfection. However, the high turbidity level did not create a health hazard because the Water Department is able to maintain effective levels of chloramine for disinfection.

The Thief River Falls Water Purification Plant is currently in the construction stage of a 8.7 million dollar expansion and remodeling project. This project will enable compliance with the water quality requirements of the 1986 Amendments to the Safe Drinking Water Act.

Please be assured that the water is safe to drink. Any citizen seeking additional information should contact Allen J. Lemm, at the Water Purification Plant, phone number 681-3809.

A Very Happy New Year to All!

Christmas programs

Parking was a problem on Sunday evening when the adjacent St. Vincent de Paul Catholic and Immanuel Lutheran churches held their Christmas programs. Both churches were well filled as once again the beautiful Christmas story was portrayed. Parents, grandparents and friends always swell the crowds and take delight in the children's performances.

Redeemer

Redeemer Lutheran church held their program on Saturday evening along with their regular service. The children and confirmation class assisted by adult members presented the age-old story of Jesus' birth. Lunch was served at the close of the evening.

Presbyterian

The Presbyterian church held a candle-light service on Wednesday evening. The service was preceded by a pot-luck supper and following the hymns and Scripture and the homily, gifts from under the tree were distributed to the children and others. Everyone received an apple just as in olden times.

Seventh Day Adventist

A number of Plummer folks attended the Christmas pageant at the Seventh Day Adventist church which was given on Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings. Entitled "The Gift," it was complete with a Bell choir, a flute choir, Junior Orchestra, congregational and choir songs and a well presented pageant. Jolayne Simpson of our town is a member of the bell choir, and she and her husband, Chuck, sing in the choir.

Lloyd and Wavell Sorenson and Tricia Willett attended the program put on by the Ebenezer Lutheran church of rural Oklee on Tuesday evening.

Let us give thanks daily for the freedom we have in America, that we can worship in our Christmas programs, that the ecumenical spirit is very much alive and that we can go back and forth in our various churches to double our blessings of the Christmas season. We know that there are forces abroad who want to eliminate religious observances in our schools and public life, but let's fight to keep the freedom our forefathers fought for and keep Christ in Christmas!

Hillcrest Visit

Accompanying Pastor Johnson to Hillcrest on Thursday were Clara Hesse, Jean Carpenter and Effie Vigstol, members of the Martha Circle, who brought lunch to share with the residents and helped with the singing in his monthly church service.

Roger Walter was recently hospitalized and underwent surgery after a knee injury. He is back at home now and recovering nicely after the surgery and therapy.

Heather, fifth grade daughter of Jim and Sherrie Schiefert, underwent emergency surgery for a ruptured appendix last week. She, too, is back home and recovering quickly just in time for Christmas.

Cindy and Taylor Nielsen of Wetby, MT, arrived last week to spend the Christmas holidays with her mother, Lorna Huotari. Lorna was happily surprised when her son, Neil, who works in Arizona, also came home for a short vacation.

Retirement Party

Les Hofstad, who has taught 5th grade in our school for 22 years was honored with a coffee party on his retirement. Les had been on leave since school began in the fall because of back surgery, and came to the decision about retiring recently. Faculty members planned the special event and many others came to wish him well. Thanks for the years of service in our school, Les!

Karl and Rita Sorenson and children of Wannaska were weekend visitors of the Lloyd Sorensons. Their baby sitter and the children returned home on Sunday evening because of school on Monday, but Karl and Rita stayed on through Monday and had a birthday dinner with his parents.

Margie, Marty and David Miner of Grand Forks were Sunday dinner guests of Art and Avis Froiland.

Sunday visitors of Edna Hyde were Raymond and Lorraine Chaput and Dorothy Myhre of Brooks, Duane and Darl Jenson and Margaret Norling of Erskine.

Birthdays

Margaret Greenwald was a surprised birthday girl on Monday afternoon when she arrived at the home of Myrtle Patnode, thinking the party was for Myrtle's 94th birthday. It was Myrtle's birthday, and Margaret's was on Tuesday, but it had been planned as a surprise for Margaret. Both received cards and gifts. Attending were Pat Larson, Edna Hyde, Clara Hesse, Frances Schiefert, Willie Gallant, Lorena Westerlund, Lillie Halvorson, Charlotte Leining, Effie Vigstol and Stella Howard, as well as the birthday girls.

Vicki Malwitz, Barb Culkins and Doris Malwitz attended the funeral for Norma Slick in Baudette on Monday. She was the mother of Bob Slick, who is married to Doris' daughter, Arley.

Shirley Hegland of Baudette was an overnight guest of her mother, Clara Hesse, on Friday enroute to Moorhead, to pick-up her son Danny, who is a student at Concordia, and came home for the Christmas holiday.

Members of the Community club who met at the home of Ray Nenonen on Tuesday evening were Martin and Fern Eskell, Judy Engesether, Ruth Wilkens, Eddy Eskell and Fern Whitney.

Lighting Contest

Plummer Community Club sponsored the Christmas lighting contest of Plummer homes, which is held annually. Many homes were beautifully decorated this year making it difficult to judge, but the final decision awarded 1st prize to Carl and Joyce Magers, 2nd to Dwight and Stella Howard and 3rd prize went to the Lorenson family. Thanks to everyone who brightened the season with beautiful lights!

Mike and Sandy Greenwald and girls went to Champlin on Saturday to attend a surprise 25th anniversary party for her sister, Sharon, and Dan Siebel, which was held at a friends home. Also attending were Norm and Shirley Bauna, and Joyce Carlson of Thief River Falls, Rick and Bonnie Greenwald and Byron Baune of the Metro area. Mike's returned on Sunday.

Sharon and Rodney Wayne, Chuck and Jolayne Simpson, Mike and Sandy Greenwald and girls treated Howard and Margaret Greenwald to a birthday dinner at Brooks on Tuesday in honor of Margaret's special day.

2ND YEAR OF D.A.R.E. IN PENNINGTON COUNTY!

BACKGROUND

Project D.A.R.E. (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) is at the forefront of substance use prevention education programs. It is designed to give young people the facts about drugs and alcohol and to "inoculate" them against negative peer pressure by teaching them self-management and resistance skills. This unique program, developed in 1983 as a cooperative effort by the Los Angeles Police Department and the Los Angeles Unified School District, uses well-trained uniformed police officers to teach in the classroom. Employing a formal, semester-long curriculum, Project D.A.R.E. focuses special attention on students in elementary school exit grades (5 or 6) who are not yet likely to have been led by their peers to experiment with alcohol, tobacco, and other drugs and are, therefore, more receptive to prevention education.

This innovative law enforcement/education partnership program has several noteworthy features:

D.A.R.E. TARGETS ELEMENTARY SCHOOL CHILDREN.

Junior high and high school drug education programs have come too late to prevent drug abuse among some youth. Substantial numbers of young people have reported initiating use of alcohol, tobacco, or marijuana by junior high school.

D.A.R.E. OFFERS A HIGHLY STRUCTURED, INTENSIVE CURRICULUM DEVELOPED BY HEALTH EDUCATION SPECIALISTS.

A basic precept of the D.A.R.E. Program is that elementary school children lack sufficient social skills to resist peer pressure and say no to drugs. D.A.R.E. instructors do not use the scare tactics of traditional approaches that focus on the dangers of use. Instead, the instructors work with children to raise their self-esteem, teach them how to make decisions on their own, and help them identify positive alternatives to substance use. The D.A.R.E. curriculum addresses learning objectives consistent with those of many state departments of education and conforms to health education standards.

D.A.R.E. USES UNIFORMED LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS TO CONDUCT THE CLASS.

Uniformed D.A.R.E. instructors not only serve as role models for children at an impressionable age but also have high credibility on the subject of drug use. Moreover, by relating to students in this role, officers develop a rapport that promotes positive attitudes toward police and greater respect for the law.

D.A.R.E. REPRESENTS A LONG-TERM SOLUTION TO A PROBLEM THAT HAS DEVELOPED OVER MANY YEARS.

Many people believe that, over time, a change in public attitudes will reduce the demand for drugs. D.A.R.E. seeks to promote that change by reaching children at an early age. Equally important, D.A.R.E. instructors help children develop more mature decision-making capabilities that they can apply to many different situations as they grow up.
